ARE MOVING ON LADYSMITH

REPORTS INDICATE BRITISH CROSSED TUGELA

Buller Is Again Making an Effort to Reach the Beleaguered Garrison by Way of Acton Homes Road.

London, Feb. 6.—The Times says rumors of Buller's crossing Tugela "do not seem altogether probable, and have not as yet been supported by any authoritative evidence."

London, Feb. 5.—Reports from three points-Durban. Pietermaritzburg, and Ladysmith—this morning indicate that General Buller has set out to make good his mysterious boast of a week ago, and that for the third time he is advancing to the relief of General White and the beleaguered garrison of Ladysmith.

No official message has been given out to confirm the report of the movement, but since the censor has passed the newspaper stories it is believed in London that the main fact, at least, that Buller is on the move, is true.

The most detailed report of the three comes from Durban, through the Central News agency. This is to the effect that General Buller on Friday night crossed the Tugela, supposedly at a point above Trichards Drift, and, leaving the Boers on the right, is marching his column to Acton Homes, whence the road to Ladysmith lies almost due east through a fairly open country.

New York, Jan. 31.—The dispatch from Cape Town, which quotes Gen. Buller as saying he hoped to be in Ladysmith in a week, is discredited in London.

The report of fighting at Crocodile pool disposes of the rumor that the British had relieved Mafeking. There is no great enthusiasm in London over the expected invasion of the Orange Free State by a third British army, for it is considered likely that the Boers have planned a good defense.

ENGLAND GIVES CONSENT.

Agreement Reached Regarding Clayton-Bulwer Treaty.

Washington, Feb. 5.-The United States and Great Britain, it is asserted, have reached an amicable agreement respecting the operations of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty as affecting the right of construction and control by the United States of the proposed Nicaragua canal.

Great Britain agrees to a modification of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty by which she practically relinquishes any claims respecting a legal control of the Nicaraguan canal after it shall have been constructed. The result, therefore, is to eliminate that feature of the treaty bearing on the subject of dual control and to leave the United States free to construct and thereafter control this great inter-oceanic waterway.

Binding Corn Fodder.

Corn fodder that is cut and left standing in the field is often greatly damaged because of the loose way in which the shocks are bound. A handy and enective way to draw the shock together for tying is to take a strap and fasten an iron ring two or three inches in diameter to one end. By putting the strap aound the shock near the middle and running the free end through the ring, the shock can be brought to its smallest compass and held there while additional layers are being put on. There is little difficulty in keeping fodder which is well tied, and this method insures tight, compact shocks that will stand wind and

Economy in Feeding.

Every dollar saved in the food is an addition to the profit, but economy should never be practiced in using any foods that induce production. As long as an article is giving satisfaction it pays to use it, and when the hens fall off in laying it indicates that they require something else. To practice economy the cost of the food must be considered from the standpoint of profit. If corn has given good results and the hens cease to lay, then corn is no longer cheap. It may no doubt be purchased at less outlay than any other food that can be used, but it will not be cheap, because it is of no further use after the hens reach a condition in which they demand a new article of diet. Lean meat, fresh from the butcher, is an expensive food when it cannot be conveniently procurred, yet if the hens demand it and the results are favorable it is cheaper than corn. There is no saving in buying grain because of its cheapness when better foods are demanded, and it is this point that the poultryman should keep in view. He should feed for eggs, no matter what kind of food may be required.

Charcoal for Swine.

We have been asked by a young breeded whether charena, was a goog thing to feed swine, says an exchange. Our answer is very emphatically in the affirmative. It is a corrective, and undoubtedly prevents, and, at times, cures many allments arising from a disordered stomach. It acts as an abso bent of such gastric juices as may be injurious to the system, and cau:03 them to pass off through their property channels. Charcoal and ashes (ad. a little salt to the latter) are used large. ly by most of our breeders and farmers. In feeding charcoal or ashe just place them within the reach of it hogs and they will eat only as much s their appetites crave. Fine coal is a o relished by swine occasionally, and con be fed with perfect safety. Charcoal and ashes are very cheap, and their use may save many dollars' worth of hogs each year.

where the main object in keeping hens is to furnish a supply of eggs the inveterate sitters, such as Brahmas, Cochins, Plymouth Rocks and Langshans should be made to work for nearly all they receive. If eggs on y are wanted it is well to have the nonsitting varities, which save a great deal of labor. For more people prefer the non-sitters at the present time than formerly. Leghorns, Minorcas, Hamburgs and Houdans are kept very largely, as they are non-sitters. The e is one difficulty or drawback with the non-sitters—which is, that they lay white eggs, which are not preferred in some markets but in some places the whites are accepted as readily as are those that are dark.-Mirror and Farmer.

Distributing Trough. Last year I hauled several loads of well rotted manure mixed with straw and scattered it in piles at the head of my garden irrigating furrows. The water was turned from the main into the laterals and soaked through the manure, with the result that the strength of those manure heaps was applied direct to the roots of vegetables through the irrigations. Tomatoes thus treated yielded one-half bushel to the plant and ripened nicely at an altitude of 6,000 feet above sea level. Every experiment made has demonstrated that liquid fertilizers are valuable, and a vat will amply repay the gardener and small fruit grower who depends upon the market.

The Conversion of Senator George. The late Senator George of Mississippi was an agnostic, while his wife was deeply religious, says a correspondent from that State. She placed a neighboring Baptist minister on his trail, and he got no peace. Once, riding slowly home from Carrollton and reading his mail, the preacher burst out of the woods on his right hand and began. They came to a creek and crossed it. It was, in the Senator's language, "saddle pocket deep." On the further bank he dismounted. "Git down," he said, fiercely. The minister looked at him doubtfully. He feared a personal encounter. "Git down!" He got down. "Now," said George, "I'm tired o' being harried around th' kentry like I was a cottontail rabbit an' you was a pack of nigger dogs. Baptize me right here." It was winter time, but the venerable statesman would not be denied. The two men waded into the icy water up to their armpits, and the ceremony was performed. Senator George climbad into his saddle and looked down on the shivering evangelist. "Now," he said, "you go home and stay home I'm through with this — foolishness."

A GREAT NEWSPAPER.

It has always been claimed for The Chicago Tribune that it would, in all probability, pass with the highest average in any competitive examination among the newspapers of the United States for excellence in all departments of journalism

"Under date of May 2, 1899, the "Omaha World-Herald, editorially answering a letter from 'Inquirer' asking the names of the five best newspapers in this country, points out that a newspaper may excel in one way and be inferior in another. The World-Herald gives lists under five general headings of leading "American newspapers distinguished especially for excellence, mentioning in all some twenty.

THE FOLLOWING ARE THE HEADINGS:

The most talked about book of the decade recounted the experiences of a church company who asked in the face of every situation, What Would Jesus Do? They pledged themselves to do likewise.

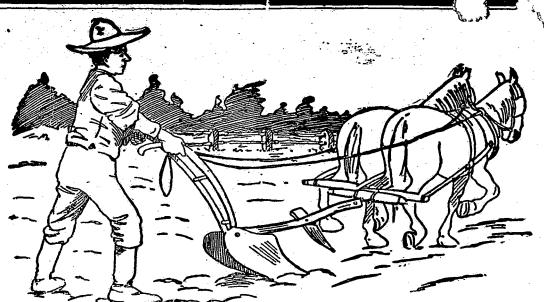

Crucifixion of Philip Strong

Tells of a clergyman who attempted to preach as Jesus would have preached. His experiences were dramatic, absorbingly interesting and in the end tragic. Both books were written by

The Crucifixion of Philip Strong will be published as a serial

I am a farmer located near Stony Brook, one of the most malarious districts in this State, and was bothered with malaria for years, at times so I could not work, and was always very constipated as well. For years I had malaria so bad in the spring, when engaged in plowing, that I could do nothing but shake. I must have taken about a barrel of quinine pills besides dozens of other remedies, but never obtained any permanent benefit. Last fall, in peach time, I had a most serious attack of chills and then commenced to take Ripans Tabules, upon a friend's advice, and the first box made me all right and I have never been without them since. I take one Tabule each morning and night and sometimes when I feel more than usually exhausted I take three in a day. They have kept my stomach sweet, my bowels regular and I have not had the least touch of malaria nor splitting headache since I commenced using them. I know also that I sleep better and wake up more refreshed than formerly. I don't know how many complaints Ripans Tabules will help, but I do know they will cure any one in the condition I was and I would not be without them at any price. I honestly consider them the cheapest-priced medicine in the world, as they are also the most beneficial and the most convenient to take. I am twenty-seven years of age and have worked hard all my life, the same as most farmers, both early and late and in all kinds of weather, and I have never enjoyed such good health as I have since last fall; in fact, my neighbors have all remarked my improved condition and have said, "Say, John, what are you doing to look so healthy?" WANTED.—A case of bad health that R.I.P.A.N.S will not benefit. They banish pain and prolong life. W. One gives relief. Note the word R.I.P.A.N.S on the package and accept no substitute. R.I.P.A.N.S. Utfor 5 cents or twelve packers for 43 cents, may be had at any drug store. Ten samples and one thousand testimonials will be mailed to any address for 5 cents, forwarded to the Ripans Chemical Co., No. 10 Spruce St... New York.

MACHINERY AND TRANSPORTATION.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Feb. 1, 1900.

The Machinery and Transportation Building, 500 by 350 feet, faces or the mall. This building is designed in a type of Spanish Renaissance, with initial inspiration in the mission buildings found in Mexico and California, supplemented by later examinations of Renaissance work in Spain, modified to suit the conditions to the Exposition with its gay and festive sur-

An early traveler writes: "The mission building is in the form of a hollow square, along the front of which a gallery extends. The edifice, a single story high, is raised a few feet above the ground. In the interior is a court adorned by a fountain and planted with trees. For the erection of the building large beams were transported from the mountains and the Indians taught to burn lime, cut stone and made brick and tile."

Briefly stated, the Machinery and Transportation buildings form a hollow square, with arcades on all sides. In the interior is a court 100 by 200 feet, adorned by a long pool of water, with a fountain surrounded with shrubs and flowers, artistically planted. This sheet of water, with its calm reflection and its atmosphere of quiet restfulness, forms one of the many little oases planned for the refreshment of the weary sightseer. If we add to the traveler's description that the roofs are of red tile the walls of cement, the work is more ornamented, the structure covered with glowing colors, we have briefly a correct description of this building. The facades present an arcaded effect corresponding in appearance to mission cloisters; the eaves with great overhangs add to the picturesque. Each facade is broken by an important architectural feature, and each corner flanked with low pavilions, the design giving large plan surfaces for color, while the eaves give deep shadows.

The color scheme is made up in reds and yellows, light in tint. The loggias, balconies, pavilions and other places are to be ornamented with shrubs, vines and flowers, blending with the coloring of the building. The openings are grilled with specimens of wrought iron, "Rejas" or grill screens, such as are seen in examples of Spanish architecture of the sixteenth century.

The building has numerous entrances, the principal ones being in the center of the four facades. Once inside the structures the size will be ap-

All the towers, pavilions and other proper spaces are to be brilliantly to steady herself. Everything was illuminated and made gay with banners and flags.

By Mary F. Haynes. "It's just my luck!" said Reuben Starbird. "Just my luck! Never knew it to fail. It's always just so."

"What is your luck?" asked Melissa Bird, to whom this speech was addressed. "What do you mean by luck, any way?"

"Why, just what I say," responded Reuben, his chin a trifle less in the air than it had been during his first speech. The crisp, impatient way in which Melissa had spoken was not without its influence. Her voice was pleasant, her smile was pleasant; yet they made him feel that she meant a good deal.

"I mean-why, I mean just this," continued Reuben, making another beginning, since the first did not seem to amount to much. "I mean that, whatever. I try to do, things seem to go against me, somehow. I don't see why it is, but I never seem to have no luck," he concluded. This seemed. even to himself, to be rather a lame conclusion, but he did not see his way towards making it any better.

He stood rather awkwardly before her yet much inclined to hold his own. even against his sweetheart.

"What have you been trying to do?" Melissa went on, with the most exasperating coolness and precision.

"Well," said Reuben, desperately, after a considerable pause, during which Melissa stood composedly surveying him with her shapely hands quietly folded over each other. "Well, f' instance, now, I started this morning to get on that seven-thirty train for New York. There's the whistle. and here'm I, a good half mile away." "Luck!" said Melissa. "I shouldn't think luck had much to do with that. If you had managed to get up half an an!" hour earlier, say, or had walked a little faster"-here she stopped, and blushed in spite of all her efforts.

"If I had not stopped to see you, that is," interposed Reuben, eager to seize the first advantage which he had been able to get in the whole conver-

"You shouldn't have stopped for anything," retorted Melissa, severely. "If it was really your business to get to that train this morning, you should have been there without any regard to anything else. Did Mr. Travis send you to buy goods?"

"No, no; I'm going on other business. Fact is, Melissa," he said, endeavoring to put on an air of superior smartness and elevating his chin in air, in that aspiring, ineffectual fash ion which was as characteristic of him as the pretty air of decision with which Melissa held her well-shaped. softy rounded chin slightly inclined downward was of her; "the fact is. I'm tired of a country store. You never get ahead any; drudge all your life, and never get anywhere. Now. in New York just see what luck a fellow gets into sometimes. Look at all those rich old chaps who went there from the country without a dollar and just see what luck some of 'em dropped into!"

Up went Reub's chin, higher and higher, as he felt himself lifted upon the tide of his own eloquence and am-

"They had pluck, and you haven't," said Melissa, with that horrible, relantless directness of speech which always made Reuben tremble in his shoes; "they had what some folks call stickativeness, and you haven't; they--"

"Now look here, hold on, Melissa!" cried Reuben, immensely aggrieved.

"Here are you and I, that have been to try and be somebody, and get money, and all that." "Then why don't you go back and attend to the business that you know how to do and can do well, if you only choose to give your mind to it,

what you may call courting these two years, and this is the way you talk to me, just as I'm really starting out to do something at last. And it's for you as much as for myself that I want instead of mooning off after things you can never get?" Melissa's own heart was sore; but she dared not give way to weakness

now. She felt that the critical mement had come for both of them. It was now or never. "If you take that view of it," said

Reuben slowly, "perhaps---" "I'm trying to take a common-sense view of it," returned Melissa, resolutely choking down a rising sob. "Common sense is the surest thing to depend on in this world. You have a good place here, Reuben, and you will not lose it, unless you lose it by your own fault. Mr. Travis has a good trade, and he is growing old and getting tired of the business. You might just as well have it as anybody. But who is there that you know in New York? Where could you get a place? Do you know anything about the way people do things there?"

"I suppose I'm not such a fool but that I could learn," said Reuben, with much dignity.

He lifted his hat; he turned away. Melissa's heart felt like lead within her breast. But she had done her duty; she had delivered her soul. The issue lay in the hands of Providence. She was a devout believer in Providence; she trusted that "Providence would overrule everything for good." But in spite of all her faith, a horrible secret unbelief kept hinting, "But suppose Reub should be let to go, after ently produced the following:

She was very miserable as she sat down on a green bank beside the path Till Death blowed out the gas of life." through the fields. She could not go any further. The tears began to come thick and fast into the gray eyes. All the fire was gone out of them now.

Would Reuben go, or would he not? stitution. That was the only thing which made any distinct impression upon her mind. On that question hung her whole future. She had set her foot down, and she must be firm. Long enough had she endured Reuben's shilly-shallying; either he must change, or she must Oh, if she could but make him change! Reuben was so kind, so pleasant, so full of fun, so nice, so agreeable; she was so fond of him.

But on the other hand, he was so irresolute, so easily disastisfied with things about him. If he did not stop pretty soon and turn square round and try to stick to something, he would come to be just nothing at all. He would be just like his father, old Isril Starbird!

She thought it was all for Reuben that she was crying, because he was letting himself down, because he was not going to be the man he might have been But some of it, too, was for her own pride, for the loss of that secretly longed for, that comfortable and dignified position as the wife of the village storekeeper who always wore a silk dress on a Sunday, and had her bonnets from the city. She, too, had had her fine little air-castles, though they were built upon more solid foundations than Reuben's. It was partly

She stole in noiselessly, and shut herself up in her own room. "She had a headache," and that was the last of her for that day. The night was long and sleepless. Next morning she came down stairs, and tried to take up the burdens of life again.

"Melissa," said her mother, "you must go down to the store before breakfast, and see if those things came yesterday; spices an' things, you know. I want 'em to cook with the first thing this forenoon."

The Last Link Found Two Years After an

Estate Had Gone to the Crown. It was one of those big English estates which was to make a great many people rich if all the links in the long chain of ancestry could be found. The legatees in this country had twentyone years in which to prove their claim before the property would revert to the Crown. Everything possible had been done, and one link was still missing. This was an old family Bible containing certain necessary records. It was supposed to have been burned at the time of the Deerfield massacre, but, notwithstanding, every effort had been made to find it if by any possibility it was in existence; but without success and the time expired.

Two years later one of the legatees, a New York woman, chanced to see in a paper the advertisement of a woman who wanted work. The advertiser had signed her name, and it was a family name of the woman who was one of the claimants for the English estate. It was perhaps the persistent fascination which the earnest searcher into genealogical records never loses, and the force of habit formed in many years' search for precious documents, which interested her at once. SYNOPSIS.

Chapter I--Philip Strong, a minister, receives two calls, one to a college town, where he may live a quiet, scholarly life, to his liking, the other to a manufacturing town, where there is plenty of work to do among the laboring classes. He accepts the more active field.

Chapters II and III-Phillip discovers that a number of his wealthy parishioners have property rented for saloons and gambling houses. He interviews one of them and is advised that he had better not stir the matter up. The next Sunday he preaches upon the subject, and Mr. Winter one of his most prominent parishioners rises from his seat and walks out of the church. The same evening Mr. Winter calls on the minister and resents what he calls an insult to humse f, and threatens to withdraw his support from the church, retires in high dudgeon. The sermon creates great excitement, and the next Sunday a large crowd attends Phillips church, expecting a sensational sermon, but Phillip disappoints them preaching on an entirely different subject.

Chapter IV-Phillip attacks the saloons and preaches against them to a large congregation. He calls upon his people to join with him in an attempt to exterminate them. Later he leaves his house to visit a sick child, and a man on the opposite side of the street fires two shots at him. Chapter-V-Phillip has been severely though not mortally wounded. "You know well enough that you are the man who shot me Tuesday night. I know you are the man, for I saw your face very plainly by the light of the street lamp. Now, all that I wanted to see you here for before you were taken to jail was to let you know that I do not bear any hatred toward you. The thing you have done is against the law of God and man. The injury you have inflicted upon me is very slight compared with that against your own soul. Oh, my brother man, why should you try to harm me because I denounced your business? Do you not know in your heart of hearts that the saloon is so evil in its effects that a man who loves his home and his country must you again this side of heaven. How speak out against it? Mrs. Strong was alarmed at Philip's appearance. The scene had been too much for his strength. She hastily commanded the officer to take his prisoner away and with the help of her friend cared for the minister, who, after the first faintness, rallied and then gradually sank into sleep that proved more refreshing than any he had yet enjoyed since the night of the shooting.

The next day found Philip improving more rapidly than Mrs. Strong had thought possible. She forbade him the sight of all callers, however, and insisted that he must keep quiet. His wounds were healing satisfactorily, and when the surgeon called he expressed himself much pleased with his patient's appearance.

"Say, doctor, do you really think it would set me back any to think a lit-

"No. I never heard of thinking hurting people. I have generally considered it a healthy habit."

"The reason I asked," continued Philip gravely, "was because my wife absolutely forbade it, and I was wondering how long I could keep it up and fool anybody."

"That's a specimen of his stubbornness, doctor," said the minister's wife, smiling. "Why, only a few minutes before you came in he was insisting. that he could preach tomorrow. "I think he deserves the worst you can do, doctor."

"But say, dear people, I can't stay here a month. I must be about my Muster's business. What will the church do for supplies?"

will take care of that." But Philip was already eager to get to work. Only the assurance of the surgeon that he might possibly get out in a little over three weeks satisfied him. Sunday came and passed. Some one from a neighboring town who happened to be visiting in Milton occupied the pulpit, and Philip had a quiet, restful day. He started in the week determined to beat the doctor's time for recovery, and, having a remarkably strong show, and the saloons, in violation of constitution and a tremendous will, he bade fair to be limping about the house in two weeks. His shoulder wound healed very fast. His knee bothered him, and it seemed likely that he would go lame for a long time. But he was not concerned about that if only he could go about in any sort of fashion once more.

Wednesday of that week he was surprised in an unexpected manner by an event which did more than Anything else to hasten his recovery. He was still confined to bed down stairs when or aimlessly strolling up and down the in the afternoon the bell rang, and Mrs. Strong went to the door, supposing it was one of the church people come to inquire about the minister. She found instead Alfred Burke, Philip's old college chum and seminary classmate. Mrs. Strong welcomed him heartily, and in answer to his eager inquiry concerning Philip's condition she brought when he had spoken the first Sunday him into the room, knowing her patient quite well and feeling sure the sight of his old chum would do him His one purpose was to do just as, in more good than harm. The first thing his thought of Christ, he would do Alfred said was:

"Why didn't you come and preach quizzically.

"Why, haven't you heard? I did not get news of the affair until last Saturday in mr western parish, and I was just in the throes of packing up to come on to Elmdale."

"Elmdale?" "Yes; I've had a call there. So we shall be neighbors. Mrs. Burke is up there now getting the house straighten-

"Thank you, Philip. By the way, I saw by the paper that you had declined a call to Elmdale, so I suppose they pitched on me for a second choice. You never wrote me of their call to you," he said, a little reproachfully.

"It didn't occur to me," replied Philip truthfully. "But how are you going to like it? Isn't it rather a dull old place?"

"Yes, I suspect it is, compared with Milton. I suppose you couldn't live without the excitement of dodging as-

CHAPTER VI.

In spite of his determination to get out and occupy his pulpit the first ship men need and turns that also into Sunday of the next month Philip was a day of merchandise. Do we need reluctantly obliged to let five Sundays any other fact to convince us of the go by before he was able to preach. During those six weeks his attention heart? was called to a subject which he felt ought to be made the theme of one of "his talks on "Christ and Modern Society." The leisure which he had for reading opened his eyes to the fact that yet this ordinance is held by them in Sunday in Milton was terribly desecrated. Shops of all kinds stood wide open. Excursion trains ran into the large city 40 miles away, two theaters were always running with some variety an ordinance forbidding it, unblushingly flung their doors open and did more business on that day than any other. As Philip read the papers he noticed that every Monday morning the police court was more crowded with "drunks" and "disorderlies" than on any other day in the week, and the plain cause of it was the abuse of the day before.

In the summer time baseball games were played in Milton on Sunday. In. the fall and winter very many people spent their evenings in card playing main street. These facts came to Philip's knowledge gradually, and he was not long in making up his mind that Christ would not keep silent before the facts. So he carefully prepared a plain statement of his belief in Christ's standing on the modern use of Sunday, and as on the other occasions in the month he cast out of his reckoning all thought of the consequences. with that subject.

the first Sunday Philip appeared in his saloon again. But when he finally recovered sufficiently to preach he determined that for awhile he would say nothing in the way of sermons against the whisky evil. He had a great horror of seeming to ride a hobby, of being a man of one idea and making people tired of him because he harped on one string. He had uttered his denunciation, and he would wait a little before he spoke again. The whisky power was not the only bad thing in Milton that needed to be attacked. There were other things which must be said. And so Philip limped into his pulpit the third Sunday of the month and preached on a general theme, to the disappointment of a great crowd almost as large as the last one he had faced. And yet his very appearance was a sermon in itself against the institution he had held up to public condemnation on that occasion. His knee wound proved very stubborn, and he "So you are pastor of the Chapel limped badly. That in itself spoke eloquently of the dastardly attempt on his life. His face was pale, and he had grown thin. His shoulder was stiff, and the enforced quietness of his delivery contrasted strangely with his customary fiery appearance on the platform. Altogether that first Sunken or written.

> "Or take the case of the saloons. What right have they to open their doors in direct contradiction to the such contempt that this very morning as I came to this church I passed more than half a dozen of these sections of hell, wide open to any poor sinning soul that might be enticed therein. Citizens of Milton, where does the responsibility rest for this violation of law? Does it rest with the churches and the preachers to see that the few Sunday laws we have are enforced by them, while the business men and the police lazily dodge the issue and care not how the matter goes, saying it is none of their business?

"But suppose you say the saloons are beyond your power. That does not release you from doing what is in your power, easily, to prevent this day from being trampled under foot and made like every other day in its scramble after money and pleasure. Who own these fruit stands and cigar stores and meat markets and who patronize them? Is it not true that church purchasing of them on the Lord's day? I have been told by one of these fruit dealers with whom I have talked lately that among his best customers on Sunday are some of the most respected members of this church. It has also been told me that in the summer time the heaviest patronage of the Sunday ice cream business is from the church members of Milton. Of what value is it that we place on our ordinance rules forbidding the sale of these things covered by the law? How far are we responsible for our example for encouraging the breaking of the day on the part of those who would find it unprofitable to keep their business going if we did not purchase of them on this day?

"It is possible there are very many persons here in this house this morning who are ready to exclaim: 'This is intolerable bigotry and puritanical narrowness. This is not the attitude Christ would take on this question. He was too large minded. He was too far advanced in thought to make the day to mean anything of that sort."

"But let us consider what is meant the Sunday of our modern life as thrist would view it. There is no disputing the fact that the age is material, mercantile, moncy making. For six eager, rushing days it is absorbed in the pursuit of money or fame or pleasure. Then God strikes the note of his silence in among the clashing sounds of earth's Babel and calls mankind to make a day unlike the other days. It is his merciful thoughtfulness for the race which has created this special day for men. Is it too much to l ask that on this one day men think day of his reappearance in his pulpit of something else besides politics, was a stronger sermon against the sa-stocks, business, amusement?
