

Short Talks on Advertising

By Charles Austin Bates.

No. 3.

The first insertion of an advertisement very seldom pays. That is to say—if you have never advertised before in a certain paper it will take some little time for its readers to get acquainted with you, and until they do, don't expect much return. There are occasional exceptions, of course, but they are few and far between. It is the systematic, persistent effort that pays in advertising as in everything else. In taking medicine the regularity of the dose is almost as important as the drug itself.

For that reason the columns of the newspaper offer the very best medium for business announcements. For that reason, programs and wall hangers, and schemes of all sorts, from an industrial write-up of the town to a picture card, are never effective. It may be well enough to indulge in a pretty novelty occasionally, if you are using all the space you need in the papers.

I have been a publisher of programs and of other "schemes"—I have advertised in them, and in my whole experience on both sides of the fence, I have never heard or known of a single advertisement in a medium (?) of that kind that paid.

The local newspaper goes into the home bristling with intelligence.

The local newspaper goes into the house bristling with intelligence, brimful of the news of the world, sparkling with the daily doings of the community. If the advertisers are awake to their opportunities it contains business news of value to every reader, for it pays to read advertisements. Advertisements are becoming more truthful every day. Business men know that their news must be true, or it will fail—they remember the story of the boy and the wolf. I think it safe to say that any woman who makes a business of reading business news—ads.—will increase the buying power of her husband's dollars as much as twenty-five per cent. I am not sure but that the percentage is even greater at my house.

Remember the story of the boy and the wolf.

FARM GARDEN

CORN FOR THE SILO.

A Wrong Theory—You Will Take Out the Same Value You Put In.
 The more corn there is put into the silo the greater will be the value of the product removed from the silo. There is a popular notion that the ensilage of corn adds something to its value which is not contained in the original material. This notion is wrong, and the greater the food value of the product put into the silo the greater will be the value of the ensilage. Corn should be planted for the silo but little if any thicker on the ground than it should be planted where the object is to produce grain. Corn is distinctively a sun plant, and if it is so thickly seeded that the sun cannot reach all parts of the growing plant there is produced a product which is lacking in digestibility and which is not relished by farm stock.

A few years ago some experiments were conducted by the Cornell experiment station, the object being to determine what method of planting corn produced greatest food value. Certain plots were drilled in thickly so that no ears would develop, other plots were planted with the rows 40 inches apart and with the plants close together in the row, and other plots were planted in hills from 3 to 3½ feet apart. While a larger quantity of produce was obtained per acre where the corn was drilled in thickly, yet it contained a higher per cent of moisture and was deficient in protein and in fat.

While the money value of the broadcasted corn is not very different from the value of that grown on the other plot, this estimate does not take into account the digestibility of the various products.

The variety of corn which shall be planted must be determined somewhat by local conditions. In central New York the Pride of the North gives very satisfactory results. Whatever variety is selected it should be one which shall approach maturity before frost. The man who plants so thickly that he cuts it with the reaper is surely failing to get best results, says Country Gentleman in conclusion to the foregoing advice.

Mitchell Grass.

Mitchell grass is very highly regarded as a hay and forage plant on the interior plains of Australia. It is very productive, and the strong root system enables it to withstand long periods of dry weather, so it is thought that it should be of value in our southwestern states. Seed from Australia tried on the Potomac flats germinated readily, and a fair stand was obtained. By the middle of July the strong, leafy plants were 12 to 15 inches high, and the first heads were appearing. Two weeks later found the height increased to 2 to 2½ feet, and some of the seed was ripe. Production of seed continued throughout the season, the last being gathered Oct. 20, at which time the plants were about three feet high and the foliage very abundant. Frosts in early November killed the foliage. Most of the growth was made during July and August, which were exceedingly dry and hot months.

A Leading Ohio Stave Silo.

These silos are 12 feet in diameter by 30 feet high and are set 6 feet apart and inclosed as shown. The doors of the silos face each other in the inclosed alley. They are filled from the windows shown in the gables. They are built of 2 by 6 Norway bill stuff dressed on a level to fit a 12 foot radius. It takes 80 pieces of 2 by 6, 12 feet long, and 80 2 by 6, 18 feet long, a total of 2,400 feet of Norway bill stuff, to build one of these silos. It also takes about 100 pounds of No. 9 steel wire, which will make about 50 hoops, put on in groups; shingled roof; the silos painted three coats on outside and a coat of raw linseed oil on the inside.—Ohio Farmer.

Slow Cooling of Beeswax.

The most of the wax in this country is of a bright yellow if properly cleaned, but when rapidly cooled, as is likely to be the case with the inexperienced, it has mixed in it more or less foreign particles that give it a dull or dirty color. If allowed a long time in cooling, it will be kept a long time in that liquid state suitable for the settling of the foreign particles, and thus the dirty looking wax will become bright yellow, says American Bee.

BLACK ROT OF GRAPES.

Spray While Vines Are Dormant and Prevent Ragged Clusters.

Black rot is one of the most troublesome and destructive of grape diseases. It chiefly attacks the fruit and causes dark spotting and rotting of the green berries, but it may also attack the leaves, petioles and cluster branches, producing circular or elongated dead spots in them. The rotted fruits persist upon the branches and may hang on over winter, thus carrying the fungus from year to year. This disease if neglected is very destructive, and the longer the neglect the greater is the difficulty in prevention. Because of the circumstances stated delay in beginning the treatment increases the difficulty. It is apparently essential that first applications of fungicide for the black rot be made while the vines are dormant and that these be very thorough, followed by the applications just before blossoming, just after the fruit has set and a still later application. Omission of the spraying just before the blossoms open may lead to ragged clusters from dropping of the small grapes.

Dangerous Kidney Diseases.

Celery King has cured me of kidney disease. The doctor feared Bright's disease, and tried many remedies that gave me no help. Celery King has made me as well as ever in my life, and it seems almost as though a miracle had been wrought in my case.—Jennie O. Reichard, Springtown, Pa.

Buchanan has been made a station for the determining of the water power at this point. The station is one of those established under control of the Water Power Department of the U. S. Geological Survey, and is the only one in this section of Michigan and is the only one on the St. Joseph river. The apparatus is in charge of Mr. H. H. Hosford and briefly described is as follows: A gage board marked with feet and decimals, the zero mark being at the crest of the dam, is placed in position above the dam, and another gage board is placed in the tail race, the zero being the low water mark at that point. The readings on the two boards are taken each day on blanks furnished by the department. A current meter is also placed in the river, and the readings therefrom taken daily. These readings are then forwarded to the department at Washington and a chart made of the readings for the annual report of the Geological Survey. The importance of this station is considerable as its establishment will bring Buchanan's water power prominently before all interested in water power. Readings for the station began Tuesday, the power gage showing three feet of the water going over the dam at this time.

Regular meeting of East Hive No. 19, April 9th.
