M'KINLEY WILL LIVE.

Dr. McBurney Announces that the President Has Passed the Danger Point.

MAY CARRY BULLET TO GRAVE

Details of the Dastardly Attack on the Nation's Chief Executive by an Anarchist.

Attempted Assassination Occurred in the Temple of Music at Pan-American Exposition.

Milburn House, Buffalo, N. Y., Sept. 10.—The president will live, but will probably carry the bullet of the would-be assassin with him to the grave. This is the expressed opinion of Dr. Charles McBurney of New York in a statement to a representative of the press after the consultation of the physicians Tuesday morning. He announced that the president had passed the danger point, and now only the possibility of complications remained. He also announced that unless the bullet embedded in the muscles of the back caused trouble, there would be no necessity to extract it. In his opinion it would not even be located with the X-ray. The only use of the X-ray, he said, would be to satisfy curiosity. All the other physicians were equally confident after the morning consultation, that recovery was assured. Dr. Mynter said the president was out of the woods, and Dr. Wadsworth supplemented the figure of speech by adding "with plenty of daylight behind him."

ATTEMPT TO KILL M'KINLEY
Easy for Any One Who Was Willing to Pay the Penalty.

It was a few moments after 4 p. m., while President McKinley was holding a public reception in the great Temple of Music on the Pan-American grounds, that the cowardly attack was made. Standing in the midst of crowds numbering thousands, surrounded by every evidence of good will, pressed by a motley throng of

A reporter consulted senator Hanna as to his views regarding the necessity for governmental action tending to suppress anarchy.
"Something must be done," was the answer, "not only by the federal government but by the states, but it is a hard question to figure out what to do. We will get to that when the president has fully recovered. We cannot go too far in protecting the country from such blows as it has just received."

people, showered with expressions of love and loyalty, besieged by multitudes all eager to clasp his hands—amid these surroundings and with the ever-recurring plaudits of an army of sightseers ringing in his ears, the blow as the assassin fell, and in an instant pleasure gave way to pain, admiration to agony, folly turned to fury, and pandemonium followed.

It was just after the daily organ ritual in the splendid Temple of Music that the dastardly attempt was made. Planned with all the diabolical ingenuity and finesse of which anarchy or nihilism is capable, the would-be assassin carried out his work without a hitch, and should his designs fail and the president survive, only to Divine providence can be attributed that result. The president, though well guarded by United States secret service detectives, was fully exposed to such an attack as occurred. He stood at the edge of the raised dais upon which stands the great pipe organ at the east side of the structure. Throngs of people crowded in at the various entrances to gaze upon the executive, perchance to clasp his hand and then fight their way out in the good-natured mob that every minute swelled and multiplied at the points of ingress and egress to the building.

The president was in a cheerful mood and was enjoying to the full the hearty evidence of good-will which everywhere met his gaze. Upon his right stood John G. Milburn, of Buffalo, president of the Pan-American exposition, chatting with the president and introducing to him especially persons of note who approached. Upon the president's left stood Cortelyou. It was shortly after 4 p. m. when one of the throng which surrounded the presidential party, a medium-sized man of ordinary appearance and plainly dressed in black, approached as if to greet the president.

Both Secretary Cortelyou and President Milburn noticed that the man's hand was swathed in a bandage or handkerchief—reports of bystanders differ as to which hand. He worked his way amid the stream of people up to the edge of the dais until he was within two feet of the president. President McKinley smiled, bowed and extended his hand in that spirit of geniality the American people so well know, when suddenly the sharp crack of a revolver rang out twice, loud and clear above the hum of voices, the shuffling of myriad feet and vibrating waves of applause that ever and anon swept here and there over the assemblage.

ONE INSTANT OF SILENCE

Then the Dastard Who Shot Is in the Hands of Retribution.

There was an instant of almost complete silence. The president stood stock still, a look of hesitancy, almost of bewilderment, on his face. Then he retreated a step, while a pallor began to steal over his features. The multitude, only partly aware that something serious had happened, paused in surprise; while necks were craned and all eyes turned as one to the rostrum where a great tragedy was being enacted. Then came a commotion. With the leap of a tiger three men threw themselves forward, as with one impulse, and sprang toward the would-be assassin. Two of them were United States secret service men who were on the lookout and whose duty it was to guard against just such a calamity as had here befallen the president and the nation.

PRESIDENT M'KINLEY.

The third was a bystander, a negro, who had only an instant previously grasped in his dusky palm the hand of the president. As one man the trio hurled themselves upon the president's assailant. In a twinkling he was borne to the ground, his weapon was

"But you are wounded," cried his secretary. "Let me examine."

"No, I think not," answered the president, "I am not badly hurt, I assure you."

Nevertheless, his outer garments were hastily loosened, and when a trickling stream of crimson was seen to wind its way down his breast, spreading its tell-tale stain over the white surface of the linen, their worst fears were confirmed.

A force of exposition guards was on the scene by this time, and an effort was made to clear the building, for by this time the crush was terrific. Spectators crowded down the stairways from the galleries, the crowd on the floor surged forward toward the rostrum, while, despite the strenuous efforts of police and guards, the throng without struggled madly to obtain admission. The president's assailant, in the meantime, had been hustled to the rear of the building by exposition guards, where he was held while the building was cleared, and later he was turned over to Superintendent Bull of the Buffalo police department, who took the prisoner to No. 13 police station, and afterward to police headquarters. After a long search by every available detective both in local circles and at other points, the police learned that his name is Leon Czolgosz; that he was born at Detroit, and came here from Cleveland.

wrested from his grasp and strong arms pinioned him down. Then the multitude which thronged the edifice began to come to a realizing sense of the awfulness of the scene of which they had been unwilling witnesses. A murmur arose, spread and swelled to a hum of confusion, then grew to a babel of sounds, and later to a pandemonium of noise.

The cross shows where the president stood when shot. Seats had been removed in order that he could hold a reception.

The crowds that a moment before had stood mute and motionless now, with a single impulse, surged forward toward the stage of the horrid drama, while a hoarse cry welled up from thousand throats and a thousand men charged forward to lay hands upon the perpetrator of the dastardly crime. For a moment the confusion was terrible. The crowd surged forward regardless of consequences. Men shouted and fought, women screamed and children cried. Some of those nearest the doors fled from the edifice in fear of a stampede, while hundreds of others from the outside struggled blindly forward in the effort to penetrate the crowded building and solve the mystery of excitement and panic which every moment grew and swelled within the congested interior of the edifice.

PRESIDENT M'KINLEY KEEPS COOL

Declares He Is Not Badly Hurt, and Deprecates Alarm.

After the first shock of the assassin's shot the president retreated a step, then, as the detectives leaped upon his assailant, he turned, walked steadily to a chair and seated himself, at the same time removing his hat and bowing his head in his hands. In an instant Secretary Cortelyou and President Milburn were at his side. His waistcoat was hurriedly opened, the president meanwhile admonishing those about him to remain calm, and telling them not to be alarmed.

The president was removed in the automobile ambulance and taken to the exposition hospital, where an examination was made. The best medical skill was summoned, and within a brief period several of Buffalo's best known practitioners were at the patient's side. The president retained the full exercise of his faculties until placed on the operating table and subjected to an anesthetic. The walls of the abdomen were opened, but the ball was not located. The incision was hastily closed, and after a hasty consultation it was decided to remove the patient to the home of President Milburn. This was done. Arrived at the Milburn residence, all persons outside the medical attendants, nurses and the officials immediately concerned were excluded, and the task of probing for the bullet, which had lodged in

Dr. Allen McLane Hamilton, professor of mental diseases at Cornell college, was asked his opinion as to the probable influence which led Czolgosz to shoot the president. He had formed an opinion from what he had read of the shooting that the act of Czolgosz was "largely due to the deplorable influence of certain sensational papers that have worked upon such minds as his."

MICHIGAN'S NORTH LAND.

Delightful Vacation Spots.

It has been the lot of the editor of the Record to spend a few weeks in Northern Michigan in company with his family and a more delightful trip would be hard to find anywhere in this broad land.

The train rushed on past Worth. Standish, Deep River, Sterling, Alger. Greenwood and other stations that had once been thriving and important lumber towns but now seemed almost forsaken.

Promptly on time our train pulled into Roscommon station and as we were to visit Higgin's Lake our party alighted from the train and were met by relatives with whom we were to stay. We were greatly surprised at Roscommon for we had anticipated somewhat similar conditions to those just witnessed.

Arriving at Higgin's Lake we were charmed with the view which burst upon our gaze. The lake is a beautiful sheet of fresh water 9 miles long and 3 miles wide and the water is as clear as crystal, objects 20 to 30 ft. below the surface being plainly discernable.

have so gradual a descent that a person will scarcely find a depth of 5 feet of water short of a distance of a quarter of a mile from the shore, the coloring of the water being very pronounced at the different depths, shading from a light green to a deep blue almost black.

Several pretty resorts are situated upon the shores of the lake, the largest being owned by Bay City people who have built a number of cottages and spend several months upon these delightful shores, and about one mile further west on the shore is the Saginaw resort of about 15 cottages.

The pine barrens around the lake are filled with partridge and small game, while just across the lake and one mile west is a big swamp which is fairly alive with bear, deer and wildcats, affording the sportsman any kind of sport he may desire. The lake is the headwaters of the Muskegon river and a favorite pastime is to take a boat and float down the river to Lake Michigan, the trip taking about two weeks.

Short Talks on Advertising By Charles Austin Bates. Illustration of a man sitting at a desk writing.

Advertisements won't work miracles. They won't sell ice in Greenland nor snowshoes at the equator. An advertisement will sell overcoats in July if they are cheap enough, but a reasonable ad of seasonable stuff is always best.

Dull season advertising must be considered in two ways, as advertising and as insurance—insurance of business—insurance against loss of trade.

Such insurance should be placed on the same business principles that dictate the placing of fire and life insurance. Pick out the strongest companies—the Business insurance—advertising—is better than the other kinds. They repay the losses caused by misfortune. Advertising prevents the misfortune. It may be possible to do advertising from which you will never see any results.

Advertising finds a parallel in farming. At some seasons the harvest follows the planting very quicky, at others the result is slower.

Plant advertising seed in December and the crop comes at once. Plant in July and it may be September before the full, rich harvest comes, but it will come.

And if you plant a little "gar-den sass" along with it, you'll get something to eat right straight through July and August, too.

Don't try to sell heavy things—things involving great outlay. Seek out the little catchy, useful things. Get a wedge of satisfaction started in to the house with a three-cent fan, and the big end of it will carry in some silk dresses later on.
