This accident is reported to have happened at 6:30 in the morning; but one man declares he was knocked out of bed at 4:30 by the shock. As the sun rose the fog lifted and gradually we came into the Liverpool Jock.

Our luggage was all out of the hold and out of the cabin and labeled for London; and so we could be on deck enjoying the varied scenes. How good it was to see horses and carts again, the horses looked so la ge. The English soldiers have their hats on the side of their heads making one imagine what fun it would be to just give them a little touch and see them tumble off. The ambulance was there waiting to take a passedger who was very ill. We were kept waiting until all the 1st class passengers and their luggage (not baggage in Eng-turn around and stare at us. We were to get off at Ludwick St. Seeing the name of the street, thought it time to get off when the conductor said, "Hit is not sife to cross here." ## A Bridegroom's Ears

In the good old days when New York was called New Amsterdam there lived near Bowling Green a rich Dutchman, Gerrit Ten Broek, whose daughter Anneka was the apple of his eye. Anneka was seventeen, and her father thought it high time that he should arrange a marriage for her, for in those days girls were married much younger than now and had very little to say in the choice of a husband.

Ten Brock was engaged in the fur business with one Ten Eycke, Ten Eycke buying furs in Albany which Ten Brock sold in New York. The two Tens were not only partners in business, but bosom friends. One day Ten Brock wrote his partner:

Anneka is now old enough to be married. What has become of your son Peter? I remember him as a little boy, and he promised to be a fine looking man, except that his ears, which were very large, stuck out singularly from his head. His mother was trying to alter their position. I trust she succeeded. However, this has nothing to do with what I have in mind. As I said, Anneka is old enough to be married. What do you say to uniting our business for another generation at least by marrying your son to my daughter? To this Ten Eycke replied:

Your plan of marrying my son to your daughter is a very good one. The only trouble in the way is the defect you mention. Peter is very sensitive about it, and I fear I shall not be able to persuade him to marry any one. However, I will see what I can do in the matter.

After much coaxing Peter, was won over to the plan. A betrothal was made by letter, for ships sailed infrequently between New Amsterdam and Albany in those days, and the journey was too troublesome to be taken when it could be avoided. At least this was the reason given by the parents of the contracting parties. The real reason was it was feared if Anneka after seeing her betrothed should have time to act before the wedding she would refuse to be married. Anneka was broken hearted over the matter, though her father could not find out whether it was the deformity that troubled her | though not especially noticeable. He or that she had a lover of whom he announced himself as Peter Ten Eycke. knew nothing.

However, he paid no attention to his daughter's repugnance to the match, and it was arranged between him and Ten Eycke that Peter should come October, 1686, for the purpose of being | concluded to accommodate you." married. Every preparation was made for the wedding-the parlor swept very much troubled about his son-inclean, the dining room and kitchen law's deformity, and Peter Ten Eycke (they were one) scrubbed and no end of had a ladylove in Albany. The concakes made. At 11 o'clock in the morn-sequence was that the wedding party ing of Oct. 7 a young man appeared at | went back to the house and ate the the front door, gave a loud rap and wedding feast, all well satisfied. side, napping when their owner walked, his heart misgave him. How could he inflict such a deformity upon his daughter? His neighbors would be forever laughing at him, in their sleeves if not openly. Nevertheless a Dutchman of those days never gave up a purpose. Gerrit had no thought of receding from his plan, but a natural tenderness for his only child induced him to comfort her.

"We will not hasten matters, my dear," he said. "Tomorrow will be time enough for the wedding, or, if you like, next week. Meanwhile you will become accustomed"-

"If I must marry him," said Anneka, "let it be at once."

"What—as soon as he has arrived?" "Yes. I am ready now." "Very well, my child, since you wish

The ears of the groom flapped in the wind, and the townspeople crowded the wedding party to get a view of him, not scrupling to vent their mirth in loud guffaws. In the church the dominie had a hard time to keep the people from unseemly behavior and hurried through the service so rapidly that few heard the words, and if the couple had been Hans and Mary instead of Peter and Anneka no one would have known the difference. When the twain were pronounced man and wife and they had turned and faced the people to leave the church, the groom put his hands to his ears and, to the surprise of every

For a time there was a silence, after which came at intervals explosions of laughter as the phlegmatic Dutchmen one after another got it into their heads that the man had worn false ears. Meanwhile the bridal couple started down the aisle, the groom. grinning from ear to ear, the bride-
