IN MEMORIAN

MYRA CLARK SMITH.

Myra Clark Smith was Forn in New York City, Dec. 15, 1853. When but a young sirl she removed with her father's family to Buchanan, and for the remainder of her life this place has been her home.

She was married January 25, 1873, to Joseph L Richards by the Rev. W. W. Wells She died Sunday morn ing February- 12, 1905 For twenty years she had been afflicted with heart trouble; other complications also arose, which added to her great suffering. Many times during the past four years her life has been despaired of, but all that skill could desire was done, which, with tender, watchful care, and every want and wish anticipated, her life was prolonged until the call came from Him who "Doeth all things well" to come home and. "The weary heart was at rest." Al though loth to die and leave her dear ones here, she was ready to go and dwell with loved ones who had preceeded her to the beautiful land be-

Her husband, three children, Mrs. Daisy Benedict, Joseph and George and three little grandchildren survive her. Five brothers also, are left to mourn a sister gone.

For more than thirty years Mrs Richards has been a member of the First Presbyterian church. Although not able to attend its services during the years of her illness, she always had the best interest of the church and christianity at heart, and was a cheerful and liberal giver toward the support of her church.

Not being able on account of poor health, to often mingle with the outside world, she was better known in I'r own home where she was ever ready with a smiling and cordial wel come to receive her neighbors and friends. She was generous and sympathetic with those in need and many hearts have been gladdened through her thoughtfulness. Aside from those who sit in the darkened home her memory will live long in the hearts of many friends.

The funeral services were conducted by Rev. C. E. Marvin of Niles, and the singing by the Ladies' Quartette. Those from out of town who attended the funeral were: M. F. Smith, of Milwankee; Clarke Smith, W. W. Smith and Geo. W. Smith of Minneapolis, Mrs. E. Benedict and Mrs. G. G. Bene- each at the RECORD.

The auditorium occupies the central portion of the building. Its dimensions are 80x127 feet and its height is equvilent to three stories. There are at present chairs for 1,600 persons on the main floor, and the gallery will accommodate 1,000 additional. The hall is used for student gatherings, lectures and entertainments, and the concerts of the May Festival series. It contains the "Frieze Memorial Organ," one of the most complete conclose of the World's Columbian Exposition. .

UNIVERSITY HALL

Several years ago the tall French dome which originally surmounted the central portion of the building was torn down, and replaced by a lower dome. It was feared by some that the old dome had become unsafe. and others condemned it on the ground that it was out of harmony with the rest of the building. The interior of the dome is lighted on occasions when the auditorium is in use, by two large arc lights.

At the time when the Iroquois disaster in Chicago last year aroused people all over the country to the need for efficient means of escape from large halls in case of fire, University Hall was examined with a view to improving its safety, and several new exits were provided. There are now eighteen exits from the hall, including those from the gallery and from the lower floor, and in addition, two broad stairways leading from the gallery to the lower floor.

SUPERVISORS ASSOCIATION

Governor Warner is an Industrious Worker Experimental Road Suggested

Lansing, Michigan, Feb. 14 Not all of the committees made their visits to the institutions during the recess week. The plan of making the inspections by the senate and house committees separately, instead of together, was adopted to some extent, with the view of obtaining independent impressions from somewhat varied view points, rather than that the two bodies should be impressed by only the same circumstances and suggestions. Apparently the plan is a good one; and thus it came about that the senate committee on soldiers' home made their visit to that institution last Wednesday, a week after the house committee. Each listened to the same recommendations of the board of control, and the reasons therefor, but each saw the institution under somewhat different

Former congressman E. P. Allen, of Ypsilanti, a member of the board, says that body "has discharged its duty in presenting to the state the needs of the institution, and now it is up to the state to make such provision as the state shall desire." The primary recommendation, for a new hospital building, he declares to be an imperative need. "There are nearly one thousand inmates in the home. who are passing across the boundary line at the rate of nearly ten per month. The vacancies are ever filled from the large waiting list, from whom there are at this time one hundred or more applications, whose only chance of admission is in the death of others now there. Their average age is seventy years, and both the applications and the deaths will increase faster as age increases. So will the necessary proportion of attendants About twenty per cent are usually in hospital, and the accommodations are quite inadqeuate. "There were two buggies. In the first one sat a comely looking young woman and a short, stout, determined looking young man. In the rear buggy was an elderly lady.

"When the procession stopped the young fellow leaped out and tied his horse. Then he put up the curtains of his buggy and hung the lap robe over the front.

"People began to rubber. Presently a bare arm reached out from an opening in the improvised boudoir and took from the waiting young man a bundle of clothing.

"It was evident that the young woman inside was changing her apparel and making a new toilet. The young man took a very deep interest in the proceedings. The hare arm kept reaching out from between the curtains and taking from him various articles of wearing apparel that he ished out of a battered valise.

"Every little while he would take a squint through the little glass window in the back of the buggy curtain and show his approval of the progress made by his widespread grin.

"In a few minutes the young woman emerged from the seclusion of her boudoir with her toilet almost completed. The only thing lacking was buttoning up.

"The elderly woman, evidently her mother, came promptly to her rescue. The younger woman stood out like a half-robed Venus while her mother wrestled with the stubborn fasteners and made the backward buttons ar ticulate with the holes.

"The young man viewed the progress of events with evident satisfaction, and when the last hook was in place the three formed in close order and marched into the recorder's office for a marriage license.

"The finishing touches were put on the costume by the mother, a 'squire was summoned and in the presence of an admiring populace that crowded the room they were married.

"The young man wore a big white cowboy hat and shoes that were as innocent of polish as a new born baby of clothes. He had on a waistcoat, but it was unbuttoned. The local paper wrote up the wedding, concluding

"They were Wesley Nails of Sanplace. They left the town happy and obvious. Here's luck to them. May the two Nails flourish and wax fat and finally become a whole keg of Nails.'"

The rural mail carriers are having troubles of their own these days trying to cover their routes. The roads through the country are in the most impassable condition that they have been anytime this winter. Mr. Ashbrook only covered about two or three miles of his route this morning. At this writing Mr. Rose had not returned to the office, and it is supposed that he is making better headway than the other two carriers.

The free baron's face worked fearfully.

Infuriate, his hand sought his sword. but before he could draw it the fool, anticipating his purpose, had rushed upon him with such impetuosity and suddenness that the king's guest, in spite of his bulk and strength, was thrust against the wall. Like a grip of iron the jester's fingers were buried in his opponent's throat. For one so youthful and slender in build his power was remarkable, and, strive as he might, the princess' betrothed could not shake him off. Although his arms pressed with crushing force about the figure of the fool, the hand at his throat never relaxed. He endeavored to thrust the plaisant from him; but, like a tiger, the jester clung. To and suffocated by that gauntlet of steel, the room was already going round. Black spots danced before his eyes. marked the conflict now transferred to the turnkey and the jester. The former held the fool at a decided disadvantage, as he had sprung upon the back of the jester and was also unweakened by previous efforts. But still the fool contended fiercely, striving to turn so as to grapple with his assailant. and wonderingly the free baron for a moment watched that exhibition of king's guest fell, as if fascinated, upon an object which hung from his neck.

Bending forward he scrutinized more closely that which had attracted his attention and then started back. Harshly he laughed, as though a new train of thought had suddenly assailed him, and looked earnestly into the now pale face brain crept the outlines of the prison of the nearly helpless fool.

"Why," he cried, "here's a different

Day after day passed and still the vital spark burned; perhaps it wavered, but in this extremity the jester had not been entirely neglected. But who had befriended him, assisting the spirit and the flesh to maintain their unification, he did not learn until some time later. Youth and a strong convirility and endurance. During the stitution were also a shield against wrestling the jester's doublet had been the final change, and when he began torn open, and suddenly the gaze of the to mend and his heartbeats grew stronger, even the jailer, his erstwhile assailant, the most callous of his several keepers, exhibited a stony interest in this unusual convalescence. The touch of a hand was the plaisant's first impression of returning consciousness, and then into his throbbing walls and the small window that grudgingly admitted the light. To his confused thoughts these surroundings recalled the struggle with the free baron and the jailer. As across a dark chasm he saw the face of the false duke, whereon wonder and conviction had given way to brutal rage, and, with the memory of that treacherous blow, the fool half started from his couch. As he did so the figure of the how?" woman, who had again noiselessly entered the cell, stepped forward and stood near the couch.

"Are you better?" she asked. He raised himself on his elbow, surprised at the unexpected appearance of his visitor. "Jacqueline!" he said wonderingly, recognizing the features of the joculatrix. "I must have been unconscious munity from the dampness of the all night." And he stared from her toward the window.

"Yes," she returned, with a peculiar smile, "all night." And, bending over him, she held a receptacle to his lips, from which he mechanically drank a bed," she remarked shrewdly. "Do broth, warm and refreshing, the while you like it?" he endeavored to account for the strangeness of her presence in the cell. She placed the bowl on the floor and then, straightening her slim figure, again regarded him.

"You are improving fast," she commented reflectively.

"Thanks to your sovereign mixture," he answered, lifting a hand to his bandaged head and striving to collect his scattered ideas, which already seemed to flow more consecutively. The pain which had racked his brow had grown perceptibly less since his last deep slumber, and a grateful warmth diffused itself in his veins with a growing assurance of physical relief. "But may I ask how you came here?" he continued, perplexity mingling with the sense of temporary languor that stole over him.

"I heard the duke tell the king you had attacked him and he had struck you down," she replied after a pause. His face darkened. His head throbbed once more. With his fingers he he said. "Oh. credulous king!" he added scornfully. "Was ever a monarch so easily berooled? A judge of men? No; a ruler win trusts rather to fortune and blind destiny. Unlike Charles, he looks not through men, but at

"Think po more of it." she broke in lastly, scelag the effect of her words. "Nay, gone Jacqueline," quickly reforfed the jester. "The truth, I pray you. Believe me, I shall mend the sooner for it. What said the duke, as he calls himself?".

"Why, he shook his head ruefully," answered the girl, not noticing his reservation, "Your majesty,' he said, for the memory of bygone quibbles I sought him, but found him not, alack, on the stool of repentance." "He is the best jester of us all." he muttered. "And then?" fastening his eyes upon hers.

" 'No sooner, sire,' went on the duke, 'had I entered the cell than he rushed upon me, and, it grieves me, I used the wit snapper roughly.' So," folding her hands before her and gazing at the plaisant, "I e'en came to see if you! were killed."

"You came," he said. "Yes, but

"What matters it?" she answered. "Perhaps it was magic and the cell doors flew open at my touch." "I can almost believe it," he return-

And his glance fell thoughtfully from her to the couch: Before the assault he had lain at night upon the straw on the floor, and this unhoped for imstones or the scampering of occasional rats suggested another starting point for mental inquiry. She smiled, reading the interrogation on his face.

"One of the turnkeys furnished the

"It is a better couch than I have been accustomed to," he replied, in nowise misled by her response and surmising that her solicitation had procured him this luxury. "Nevertheless the night has seemed strangely long."

"It has been long," she returned, moving toward the window, "a week and more."

"You tell me I have lain here a week?" he asked finally, recalling obscure memories of faintly seen faces and voices heard as from afar.

"And more," she repeated. For some moments he remained silent, passing from introspection to a current of thought of which she could know nothing-the means he had taken to thwart the ambitious projects of the king's guest.

"Has Caillette returned?" he continued, with ill disguised eagerness.

"Caillette?" she answered, lifting he brows at the abruptness of the inquiry. "Has he been away? I had not noticed. I do not know.'

"Then is he still absent." said the jester decisively. "Had he come back you would have heard."

Quickly she looked at him. Caillette! Spain! These were the words he had often uttered in his delirium. Although he seemed much better and the hot flush had left his cheeks, his fantasy evidently remained.

"A week and over!" resumed the fool, more to himself than to his companion "But he still may return before the duke is wedded."

"And if he did return?" she asked, wishing to humor him.

"Then the duke is not like to marry the princess," he burst out.

"Not like-to marry!" she replied suddenly and moved toward him. Her clear eyes were full upon him. Closely she studied his worn features. "Not like-but he has married her!"

The jester strove to spring to his feet, but his legs seemed as relaxed as his brain was dazed. "Has married? Impossible!" he exclaimed fiercely. "They were wedded two days since," she went on quietly, possibly regretting that surprise or she knew not what had made her speak. "Wedded two days since!"

He repeated it to himself, striving to realize what it meant.

"You must have your drollery," he said unsteadily at length.

She did not reply, and he continued to question her with his eyes. Quite still she remained save for an almost imperceptible movement of breathing. Against the dull beams from the aperture above her hair darkly framed her face, pale, dim with half lights, illusory. When he again spoke his voice sounded new to his own ears. "How could the princess have been married? Even if I have lain here as long as you say, the day for the wedding was set for at least a week from

"But changed," she responded unex-

"Changed!" he cried, sitting on the edge of the couch and regarding her as though he doubted he had heard aright. "Why should it have been changed?"

"Because the duke became a most impatient suitor," she answered. "Daily he grew more eager. Finally to attain his end he importuned the countess. She laughed, but good naturedly acceded to his request and in turn importuned the king, who generously yielded. It has been a rare laughing matter at court that the duke, who appeared the least passionate adorer, should really have been such a restless

"They were married in the Chapelle de la Trinite," responded the girl, hesitating. Then, with an odd side look, she went on rapidly: "The bridal party made an imposing cavalcade; the princess in her litter behind a number of maids on horseback. Besides the groom's own men the king sent a strong escort to the border, and thus it was a numerous company that rode from the castle, with colors flying and the princess' handkerchief fluttering from her litter a last farewell."

"A last farewell!" repeated the fool. "A splendid picture, Jacqueline. They all shouted Te Deum, and none stood there to warn her." "To warn!" retorted the jestress.

'Not a maid but envied her that spectacle-the magnificence and splendor!" "But not what will follow," he said and, lying back on his couch, closed his eyes.
