EARLY MARCH WEDDING

Mr. Lemen Marble and Miss Clara M. Burrus Start on Life's Journey

The pleasant home of Mr. and Mrs. John Burrus, about four miles southwest of Buchanan, was the scene of a happy nuptial event Wednesday evening. The occasion was the marriage of their daughter Miss Clara M. Burrus and Mr. Lemen Marble, of near New Carlisle, Ind. Rev. W. J. Tarrant of the United Brethren church, performed the ceremony at 9 o'clock, that made the happy couple husband and wife, in the presence of about 90 guests. At the appointed time the bride and groom, attended by Miss Edith Marble as bride's maid and Mr. Ross Burrus as best man, marched beneath a canopy, of white bunting and green ferns, where the ceremony was performed.

formed. An elaborate supper and best wishes followed. The young people were the recipients of many beautiful and useful presents.

They will make their home on the old Marble place near South Bend, and go forth on life's journey with the best wishes of their many friends and the congratulations of the RECORD.

Startling Mortality

Statistics show startling mortality, from appendicitis and peritonitis. To prevent and cure these awful diseases, there is just one reliable remedy, Dr. King's New Life Pills. M. Planery, of 14 Custom House Place, Chicago, says: "They have no equal for constipation and biliousness." 25c at all druggists.

AT THE UNIVERSITY

Scenes at The Popular Michigan College

THE MANY DEPARTMENTS

Will be Mentioned in a Series of Articles in The Record

The University has two gymnasiums, one for men and one for women, erected at a cost of about $125,000. The former is called the Waterman Gymnasium; the latter, the Barbour Gymnasium. In the conduct of the gymnasiums the aim is not so much the development of a few gymnastic experts as the provision of wholesome physical exercise for all students. The facilities of the buildings including physical examinations and instructions, are free to all students, the only charge being a yearly rental for a locker. A physical examination and a stated amount of gymnasium work in regular classes are required of students in the department of literature, science, and the arts, and in the department of engineering, during their first year of residence at the University. For other students, gymnasium work, for the present is, voluntary. Classes are held twice a week during the school year.

The Waterman Gymnasium was named in honor of the late Joshua W. Waterman, of Detroit, who contributed largely to its cost. The main floor is a rectangle with truncated corners and dimensions of 150 by 90 feet, and is well equipped with the various kinds of apparatus usually found in the best modern gymnasiums. Several smaller rooms are devoted to administration, fencing, boxing, and other special purposes, while the basement is given up to baths and lockers. The main hall is lighted in the daytime through a large skylight 66 feet above the floor and in the evening by electricity. A gallery makes room for an elliptical running track 375 feet in length.

The Barbour Gymnasium is named in honor of Honorable Levi L. Barbour, of Detroit, a Regent of the University and a liberal contributor to the funds for its erection. The main floor is 90 by 88 feet, and contains the apparatus required for the first and the second year exercises. In addition to the gymnasium proper the building contains a commodious hall for lectures and meetings, called Sarah Caswell Angell Hall, parlors for the accommodation of the women, and bathing facilities. A large natatorium has just been equipped. The women's dean, Mrs. Myra B. Jordan, and Dr. Helen E. Brooks, director of the gymnasium, have organized the work in accordance with the best known methods. Special care is taken to ascertain the exact physical condition of each student entering upon gymnasium work, and corrective work for physical defects is prescribed. Tennis, basket ball, and gymnastic games form a part of the recreative work.

The second is the Stone bill, file number 22, which applies to all regular elections of all officers except of city, village, town and school district, including United States senators. A blanket ballot is provided, bearing the various party tickets and a non-partisan ticket for names not presented as candidates of any party. Place on the ticket is secured by a "nomination paper," a notification having the same effect as a petition and similarly signed. The voter after marking his party ticket must separate it from the blanket ballot, and deposit the two in separate boxes. The voter al-

LANSING LETTER

Doings At the Capitol as Seen by Our Correspondent

Lansing, February 27, 1905.

For the first time in many years the Michigan legislature has remained in session through the week of February 22. The legal holiday was observed in each house by an appropriate patriotic program, the leading feature in the house being an address by State Superintendent Kelly, and in the senate short addresses by Justice Ostrander and various senators. Both were liberally embellished with musical numbers, in which the band and the choir of the Industrial School for so writes upon his ticket the name of his choice for precinct committeemen and city, representative district and county committees are constituted of the chairmen of the precinct committees, senate district committees, of the chairmen of representative district committees, congressional district committees, of the chairmen of senate district committees and the state and legislative candidates meet in convention at the capital and frame platform and elect the state committee. The act is to become effective only upon ratification at the April election. Alvah G. Stone, the author of this bill, is a farmer of Lenawee county and chairman of the elections committee, and served in the last two legislatures.

The third measure is the Waters bill, file number 37, which applies to senators and representatives both national and state, and to governor and lieutenant governor, and option ally to county and city officers. It has the same provisions for "nomination papers" as the Stone bill, but provides separate party ballot boxes, and other separate ballots for delegates to county conventions, the highest of which is chairman of his precinct delegation and also delegates to the state convention. An elector is only entitled to vote for candidates of the party with which he affiliated at the last election. The parties hold their county conventions on successive days of the third week in September, in the order of greatest number of votes, and the state conventions similarly in the succeeding week. County conventions nominate county officers where not named by primary ballot, appoint county committee, and certify the state delegates after adjusting the number of the county's quota. The state conventions nominate the remaining state officers, decide ties and fill vacancies, and promulgate a platform, of which the nominee for governor has veto power over any provision, subject to an overriding three-fourths vote. The obligation of members of the legislature to vote for the nominee of their party for United States senator is declared to be the same as that of presidential electors. The author of this bill, Arthur J. Waters, is a lawyer of Manchester, Washtenaw county, elected last fall to his first term.

The committee listened to the reading of the Waters bill at its meeting Thursday morning, and is holding daily sessions for the consideration of the various measures submitted to it. A number of the members have been in favor of reporting the Stone bill, which embodies the demands of the grange, but there is not yet any majority agreement upon any complete proposition, though it is not impossible that such agreement may be reached and a bill be reported out before this letter reaches its readers.

The proposition that was before the last legislature and failed of adoption, is again introduced into the house by Representative Herkimer of Monroe, to establish a binder twine plant at the Jackson prison, prepared at the instigation of Warden Vincent. As a proposition to employ our prison labor in competition with what is deemed an oppressive monopoly upon the people.

This is an actual fact. After a very large fall business, we must get rid of all the remaining fancy suits and winter overcoats still on hand. We carry a very large stock and if we would not have these sales it would accumulate on us too fast to be handled in the regular course of business. The quickest way we know of is a sharp, merciless cut, and this we have done, giving late buyers opportunities for buying clothes seldom offered.

Single and double breasted suits in the newest and most fashionable fabrics and colorings; belt overcoats; Chesterfield overcoats, Rytons, Pad-dock, Box Backs, all from our finest makers; such as Hart Schaffner & Marx, Michels Stern, Ely Meyer and Sam Peck. Hand made, sewed with silk throughout and lined with the finest Princess serges or Farmer satins. Positively $15 to $20 values, choice this week at $12.12.

30 Club

The 30 club met with Mrs. Bertie Smith Wednesday, March 1, and despite the fact that the walking was very bad, there was a good attendance twenty-four answering to roll call.

The lesson, Act IV from "As you Like it" was in charge of Mrs. Rough. Music was furnished by Mrs. Perrott, who exchanged with Mrs. Desenberg, and was a beautiful soprano solo, "A Winter Lullaby." Roll call was responded to by current events. "Life and Works of Sir Joshua Reynolds," was the subject of an interesting paper by Mrs. Boardman. "Work of Reynolds" was the subject of another read by Miss Redden. Mrs. Rough then gave a few interesting facts concerning his life and pictures.

The club adjourned to meet with Mrs. Sanders next Wednesday.

Chief Montine sustained a badly bruised hip, the assistant had a wrist sprained and three fingers hurt, while the driver had one knee badly injured. The men are congratulating themselves that it was no worse.

IN MEMORIAM

MISS JULIA LONG

The Angel of Death has stooped and taken from our midst one more in the person of Miss Julia Long, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Long. She was born May 9, 1890, and went to sleep peacefully on Friday afternoon at 4:40 o'clock after a short illness, aged, 14 years, 10 months, 14 days. Funeral services were held at the home of her parents, by Rev. Father Lynch, of Three Oaks. She was pure and loveable with a smile for everyone and was always surrounded by a multitude of friends.

God in his mercy giveth,
In his mercy taketh away
Our loving daughter Julia Long.
Her presence was but sunshine,
Her absence is but gloom.
The gentle turf is spreading
O'er her grave like angel fingers,
Pointing above to show us all,
The way we must go.

A chair by our hearth is empty,
And a voice in our room is still,
and we think of our dear loving daughter,
And a place we can never fill.

We can only weep and look upward,
to the heavens bright and blue,
And to think of our loving daughter,
Who is there beyond our view.

'Tis hard to break the tender cord,
Where love has bound the heart:
'Tis so hard to speak the words,
We must forever part.

Yet again we hope to meet thee,
When the day of life is past,
And in heaven with joy to greet thee,
Where no farewell tears are shed.

She suffered sore and murmured not,
We watched her,
Until her fluttering spirit
Passed gently away.

Weep not for me, I'm free from pain,
My earthly sufferings o'er,
I hope to meet you all again,
On a peaceful happy shore.

By FREDERIC S. ISHAM,
Author of "The Strollers"

Copyright, 1903, by the Bowen-Merrill Company

"God keep you, mistress," he said.
"God keep you," she answered softly.
Soon her deep breathing told him she was sleeping, and as he listened in

How came she to know that forbidden music?

fancy he could hear the faint echoes of her voice, accompanied by the sighing wind. How intrepid had she seemed! How helpless was she now! And as he bent over her, divining, yet not seeing, he asked himself whence had come this faith in him, that, like a child, she slumbered amid the unrest of nature. What had her life been, who her friends, that she should thus have chosen a jester as comrade? What had driven her forth from the court, to nameless hazards? Had he surmised correctly? Was it—
"The king," she murmured, with sudden restlessness in her sleep.
"The king," she repeated with aversion.

In the jester's breast upheaped a fierce anger. This was the art loving monarch who burned the fathers and brothers of the new faith; this the righteous ruler who condemned men to death for psalm singing or for listening to grave discourse; this the Christian king, the brilliant patron of science and learning.
The storm had sighed itself to rest, the stars had come out, but, leaning with his back against a tree, the fool still kept vigil.

CHAPTER XIX.

EXPERIENCING no further inconvenience than the ordinary vicissitudes of traveling without litter or cavalcade, several days of wandering slowly passed. Few people they met, and those for the most part various types of vagabonds and nomads. As it minimized their risk the young girl was content to wear the cap of the jester piquantly perched upon her dark curls, thereby suggesting an indefinable affinity with vagrancy and the itinerant fraternity.

Not only had she donned the symbol of her office, but she endeavored to act up to it, accepting the sweet with the sour, with ever a jest at discomfort and concealing weariness with a smile. Often the fool wondered at her endurance and her calm courage in the face of peril, for, although they met with no misadventures, each day seemed fraught with jeopardy. It appeared a brave effort to bear up under continued hardship—insufficient rest and sharp riding—and the jester reproached himself for thus taxing her strength. But often when he suggested a pause she would shake her head willfully, assert she was not tired and ride but the faster.

"No, no!" she would say. "If we would escape we must keep on. We can rest afterward."

"Where do you wish to go?" he asked her once.

"There is time enough yet to speak of that," she returned evasively.

"You have some plan, mistress?"

"Perhaps."

Half shyly she looked at him beneath her dark lashes as if to read how deeply he was annoyed and, seeing his face clear, laughed lightly.

"What are you laughing at, mistress?" he said.

"If I knew I could tell," she replied.

Toward sundown on the fourth day they came to a lonely inn set in a clearing on the verge of a forest. They had ridden late in the moonlight the night before and all that morning and afternoon almost without resting, and the first sight of the solitary hostelry was not unwelcome to the weary fugitives. A second inspection of the place, however, awakened misgivings. The building seemed the better adapted for a fortress than a tavern, being heavily constructed, with massive doors and blinds and loopholes above. A brightly painted sign, the Rooks' Haunt, waved cheerily, it is true, above the door, as though to disarm suspicion, but the isolated situation of the inn and the depressing sense of the surrounding wilderness might well cause the wayfarer to hesitate whether to tarry there or continue his journey.

A glance at the pale face and unnaturally bright eyes of the girl brought the jester, however, to a quick decision. Springing from his horse, he held out his hand to assist her; but, overcome by weakness or fatigue, she would have fallen had he not sustained her. Quickly she recovered and, with a faint flush mantling her white cheek, withdrew from his grasp, while at the same time the landlord of the tavern came forward to welcome his guests.

In appearance mine host was round and jovial. His bulk bespoke hearty living, his rosy face reflected good cheer, his stentorian voice free and easy hospitality. His eyes constituted the only setback to this general impression of friendliness and fellow feeling. They were small, twinkling, glassy.

"Good even to you, gentle folk," he said. "You tarry for the night, I take it."

"If you have suitable accommodations," answered the jester, reassured by the man's aspect and manner.

"The Rooks' Haunt never yet turned away a weary traveler," answered the landlord. "You come from the palace?"

"Yes," briefly, as a lad led away their horses.

"And have done well? Reaped a harvest from the merry lords and ladies?"

"There were many others there for that purpose," returned the jester, following the proprietor to the door of the hostelry.

"True. Still I'll warrant your fair companion cozened the silver pieces from the pockets of the gentry." And, smiling knowingly, he ushered them into the principal living room of the tavern.

It was a smoke begrimed apartment, with tables next to the wall and rough chairs and benches for the guests. Heavy pine rafters spanned the ceiling. The floor was sprinkled with sand. From a chain hung a wrought iron frame for caudles. Upon a shelf a row of battered tankards, suggesting many a bout, shone dully, like a line of war worn troopers, while a great pewter pitcher, the worse for wear, commanded the disreputable array.

In this room was gathered a nondescript company—mountebanks and buffoons; rogues unclassified, drinking and dicing; a robust vagrant, at whose feet slept a performing bear with a ring-badge of servitude—through its nose; a black bearded, shaggy haired Spanish troubadour with attire so ragged and worn as to have lost its erstwhile picturesque characteristics. This last far from prepossessing worthy half started from his seat upon the appearance of fool and jester, stared at them and then resumed his place and the ballad he had been singing.

Watching the nimble fingers of the shabby minstrel with pitifully childish expression of amusement, a half imbecile morlo leaned upon the table. His huge form—for he was a giant among stalwart men—and his great moon shaped head made him at once an object hideous and miserable to contemplate. But the poor creature seemed unaware of his own deformities and smiled contentedly and patted the table caressingly to the sprightly rhythm.

Gazing upon this choice assemblage, the pleasant was vaguely conscious that some of the curious and uncommon faces seemed familiar, and the picture of the Franciscan monk whom they had overtaken on the road recurred to him, together with the misgivings he had experienced upon parting from that canting knave. He half expected to see Nanette, to hear her voice, and was relieved that the gypsy on this occasion did not make one of the unwonted gathering. The landlord, observing the fool's discriminating gaze and reading something of what was passing in his mind, reassuringly motioned the newcomers to an unoccupied corner and by his manner sought to allay such mistrust as the appearance of his guests was calculated to inspire.

As the darkness gathered without, the merriment increased within. Over the scene the dim light cast an uncertain luster. Indefatigably the dicers pursued their pastime, with now and then an audible oath or muttered imprecation which belied that docility mine host had boasted of. The troubadour played and the morlo yet listened. Several of a group who had been singing now sat in sullen silence. Suddenly one of them uttered a broken sentence, and his fellows immediately turned their eyes toward the corner where were fool and jester. This ripple of interest did not escape the young girl's attention, who said uneasily:

"Why do those men look at us?"

"One of them spoke to the others," replied the jester. "He called attention to something."

"What do you suppose it was?" she asked curiously.

"Gladus gemmatum!" ("The jeweled sword.")

Whence came the voice? Near the couple, in a shadow, sat a woebegone looking man who had been holding a book so close to his eyes as to conceal his face. Now he permitted the volume to fall, and the jester uttered an exclamation of surprise as he looked upon those pinched, worn, but well remembered features.

"The scamp student!" he said.

Immediately the reader buried his head once more behind the book and spoke aloud in Latin as though quoting some passage which he followed with his finger. "Did you understand?"

"Yes," answered the pleasant, apparently speaking to the jester, whose face wore a puzzled expression.

The scamp student laid the volume on the table. "These men are outlaws and intend to kill you for your jeweled sword," he continued in the language of Horace.

"Why do you tell me this?" asked the fool in the same tongue, now addressing directly the scholar.

"Because you spared my life once I would serve you now."

"What's all this monk's gibberish about?" cried an angry voice as the master of the boar stepped toward them.

"A discussion between two scholars," readily answered the scamp student.

"Why don't you talk in a language we understand?" grumbled the man-

"Latin is the tongue of learning," was the humble response.

"I like not the sound of it," retorted the other as he retired. From a distance, however, he continued to cast suspicious glances in their direction. Bewildered, the girl looked from one of the alleged controverters to the other. Who was this staveling the jester seemed to know? Again were they conversing in the language of the monastery, and their colloquy led to a conclusion as unexpected as it was startling.

"What if we leave the inn now?" asked the jester.

"They would prevent you."

"Who is the leader?"

"The man with the boar," answered the scamp student. "But it is the morlo who usually kills their victims."

"Is there no way of escape?" the jester asked.

"Alas! I can but warn, not advise," said the scholar. "Already the leader suspects me."

A half shiver ran through him. In the presence of actual and seemingly assured death he had appeared calm, resigned, a Socrates in temperament; before the mere prospect of danger the apprehensive thief and fugitive elements of his nature arose.
