Someone has well said that "your home paper never loses" interest in you." This possibly you have never given a passing thought. No matter whether you like the newspaper man or he likes you, he publishes a paper for the people, he allows no personal matter or petty spite to interfere with his work of news gathering. He may meet you as a stranger yet along with his best and dearest friends chronicle your success and your sorrows wherever you may be. Those who would forget you but for your home paper, are ever and anon reminded of your existence by some item in the village paper where you spent your boyhood days. Others may deceive and defraud you, but the home paper never forgets you. Possibly you do not always deserve it, but a newspaper on the right lines has no pets, and should it at any time cause your fur to turn the wrong way, study a moment and see if it has not at various times said nice things which you fail to give it credit.—Eau Claire Enterprise.

An Eastern editor says a man got into trouble by marrying two wives. A western editor says many men have done the same thing by marrying one. A northern editor says that a number of his friends found trouble by merely promising to marry without going any farther. A southern editor says a friend of his was bothered enough when simply found in company with another man's wife. And so it goes.

Startling Mortality

Statistics show startling mortality, from appendicitis and peritonitis. To prevent and cure these awful diseases, there is just one reliable remedy, Dr. King's New Life Pills. M. IN MEMORIAM

CLARENCE BACHMAN

A very sad scene occurred at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Bachman, 1428 N. Fifth street, yesterday afternoon, when the last sad rites over the remains of their little son, Clarence, took place. The house was thronged with sorrowing friends who came to show their sympathy to the bereaved parents in their great loss. Many were the floral tributes of loving friends and neighbors.

One of the most touching parts of all was when the schoolmates of the little fellow, accompanied by their teacher, Miss Freda Paepel, came to bid their last farewell to little Clarence and in passing, each placed a rose in the little white casket. Little Clarence was dearly loved by his teacher and was a general favorite among his little schoolmates by whom he will be greatly missed.

Although hardly seven years of age, he was ever thoughtful of his parents, his love in particular being shown to his mother, who is not in good health, whom he was ever ready to help and comfort.

"Little darling, you have left us, And we'll miss you every day, But we know we'll meet you Yonder on that bright and happy day."—Niles Star.

The deceased was a nephew of Geo. Meffert of Buchanan township.

CHAPTER X

Until it is warm enough in spring seeds will not germinate although plants that have lived through the winter will continue to grow. The lowest temperature at which seeds will germinate varies with the kind of seeds. Sachs has studied this question carefully and says that Indian corn will not germinate below 48 degrees Fahrenheit nor will barley and wheat germinate below 41 degrees. At these low temperatures the sprouting is not at all satisfactory. It was found, in other experiments, that the best germinating temperatures were between 84 degrees for wheat and barley and 93 degrees for corn.

This would seem to indicate that these grains ought not to be sown very early in the spring for the ground must warm up very slowly in the spring after the frost goes out. Average temperatures of the soil would be deceiving on this point as the soil warms up, in the surface three inches, during the day and cools down during the night. Observations as early as in April in such years as 1878, when the season was unusually early, showed soil temperatures at two o'clock in afternoon, as high as 84 degrees, the temperature falling at night to 65 degrees or below. In other seasons the ground did not warm up to 65 degrees as the highest daily temperature until in late May. The rule ought to be, not to sow grains in the spring until the ground is warm enough to assure rapid germination.

Naturally wet soils warm up more slowly than dry ones because of the greater amount of heat required to raise a given weight of water one degree than is required by any of the other constituents of the soil. The wetter the soil therefore the more slowly it will warm up. This points out another forceful reason for draining all lands holding too much water. Moreover, the evaporation of water from the surface of wet soils must keep them cold.

A darker soil is somewhat warmer than a soil with lighter color, the variation not amounting to more than possibly a degree or two. So a piece of land sloping to the south grows warm earlier in the spring than one sloping to the north and keeps warmer through the season. The reason is obvious. The rays of the sun fall up on it more directly, more nerrly at right angles to the surface and less heat is reflected from it. So a loose surface may prevent the entrance of heat into the soil because of its poor conducting power. Cultivation therefore does not aid in warming the soil except as it prevents evaporation.

One of the sources of loss of heat is the evaporation of water from the uncultivated surface. To convert water into steam or into vapor requires an immense amount of heat. Our friend King states that if the heat required to evaporate a pound of water from a square foot of surface were taken from the upper cubic foot of a clay loam, it would drop the temperature of that cubic foot fully ten degrees. He noted on an April day a difference of temperature between drained and undrained fields of fully 12 degrees. Another reason for draining our fields of all surplus water and keeping the surface stirred to prevent cooling by evaporation from the surface, and the bringing up of cold water from below to take the place of the water thus evaporated. An early plowing and harrowing with frequent cultivation of the seed bed to form a surface mulch is the lesson taught by these facts.

Sweet Kitty Bellairs

"Sweet Kitty Bellairs" which will be seen in the Grand Opera House, Chicago, for an engagement of three weeks, beginning Monday, March 6, with Saturday matinee, is founded upon Egerton Castle's book, "The Bath Comedy," and is quaintly pretty and filled with interest from the beginning of the first to the ending of the fourth act. Miss Crossman as Mistress Kitty Bellairs, a young widow and the reigning belle of Bath, has the star part, and opportunities are afforded in plenty for the exercise of her undoubted talents. Her dash and sparkle, coquetry, and flashing wit seem to illuminate the play and in the final scenes arouses her audiences to great enthusiasm. While comedy is the prevailing spirit of the play, now and then there is some serious work, and Miss Crossman makes the most of it.

The story tells of the gay and brilliant life at Bath in the eighteenth century, and is filled with the dashing red-coated officers of King George III, their daring flirtations and doings. The plot hinges upon a midnight visit paid by Mistress Kitty Bellairs to the lodgings of her lover, a lieutenant in the Fifty-first Regiment, in the hope of preventing him from fighting a duel with the husband of Lady Standish, who has become wildly jealous of an unknown red-headed man who sent a lock of hair to his wife. The auburn locks of Lord Verney convince Sir Jasper Standish that he is the betrayer of his home, and the challenge follows. While Mistress Kitty is in her lover's room, accompanied by Lady Standish, Sir Jasper and a crowd of the officers of the regiment break into the house in a hilarious condition. Mistress Kitty and Lady Standish are concealed just in time, but later Kitty boldly confronts the roomful of men and risks her reputation to save that of her friend. This is really the strongest scene of the play, and made a tremendous hit.

Charles Hammond, as Lord Verney, the lover of Mistress Kitty, not only plays well, but looks well the part and Miss Fanchon Cambell, as Lady Standish cleverly portrays the hysterical, tearful, loving but miserable bride.

Notes For April Designer

The cover of the Designer for April shows a pretty girl holding converse with a pet Easter rabbit. Three handsome full pages in color are given. The fashions and millinery are in perfect accord with the spring season. A special article is on seashore costume for ladies and young folks. "The Millinery Lesson" tells how to make the new and picturesque "Envelope Hat." In the literary line there is an appropriate article on "The Flowers of Trees," by Craig S. Thoms, "The Largest Musical Club of American Women," by Lida Rose McCabe, "The Art of Pyro-Sculpture," by Jessie Garwood Fitts, "Concerning Cats and Erasmus," by Agnes C. Ruggeri, and "The Blue Pigeon," a short story by Winwood Waitt. Mrs. Gabrielle Jackson contributes an Easter tale "Our Hearts Be Pure From Evil," Bertha Hasbrook in "The Interest of Beauty," describes a gymnasium which may be bought for a dollar. A picture story of "Dorothy and the Easter Chickens" will please the tots, and the fancy-worker will find lace-work, embroidery, and work and crochet to test her skill.

Fedor Machnow, 9 Feet 21-2 Inches in His Socks, The Tallest Man in The World

Recently Fedor Machnow arrived in London on a visit to the Hippodrome. He is the tallest man that has ever visited England, for he stands 9 feet 2 1/2 inches in his socks, and weighs 378 pounds, although he is only 23 years of age.

This extraordinary man was born in Charkoff, in Russia, and until a year ago had never left his native soil. The fastest period of his growth was between the ages of 4 and 14. When he was 7 years old he was as big as an ordinary man. At 12 years of age he was 6 feet 6 inches high, and at 14 he was 5 feet 1 inch. When he was growing at this tremendous pace he often slept for 24 hours at a stretch.

When at Warsaw Machnow was drafted as a recruit of the Imperial guard. But the giant is of a peaceful disposition and quietly slipped over the frontier to avoid serving with the colors. He has appeared in Berlin and at the various music halls, and created a most tremendous sensation.

His journeys are not a source of pleasure to him, for both on the train and on the boat he has to spend most of his time in a recumbent position. He was met at Victoria by a pantechonicon van, comfortably upholstered and fitted with a huge couch for the giant to recline on, and drawn by four horses.

Of course he requires an immense amount of food to sustain his gigantic frame, and he is very particular as to its being tasty and well cooked. During the day he partakes of the following meals:

At 9 o'clock he has breakfast, consisting of 16 hard boiled eggs, 6 or 8 rolls and butter, washed down by one or two quarts of milk or tea. At 12 o'clock he partakes of from two to three pounds of roast meat, five pounds of potatoes and a quart of beer. At 5 o'clock he has soup, followed by from three to five pounds of meat, poultry, or fish, vegetable and potatoes, 3 pounds of bread and a couple of quarts of beer.

At 9 o'clock he finishes up the day with 10 to 15 eggs, bread and butter ad libitum, and a quart of tea.

To provide him with the necessary lodgings two rooms have had to be knocked into one and a special bed built for him. When he takes his drives abroad it will be on a motor omnibus, as no ordinary vehicle can possibly contain this gigantic man.

His foot measures 18 1/2 inches in length, as opposed to 10 inches of an ordinary man; his hand from wrist to finger-tip, is 12 inches, whereas the ordinary hand is only 7 inches in length. When one takes into consideration that the shoes will require an extra inch all round on account of his enormous bulk, one will decide that it is no use Fedor entering for the Cinderella competition.

Goliath, who was 9 feet 9 inches in height, would have looked askance at Fedor Machnow if he had entered the lists against him.

A few details about Machnow's wearing apparel will be interesting. He wears the largest hats made for any man in the world. His boots, which necessitate about seven times the amount of leather used for the average person's boots, cost $40 a pair. His socks, in respect to size, resemble trousers, have to be specially woven for him, and the same thing applies to most of his underclothes. Hidden under his massive glove, on the forefinger of his right hand, he wears a gold ring, which approximately weighs about half a pound. His walking stick reaches up to the shoulder of the average man, and a couple of them could well be utilized for stilts in an emergency.

Yet strangely in contrast to all these big items, Machnow has a very small neck and wears a collar which would probably be too small for the ordinary middle-aged man in the street.

To the audience at the Hippodrome however, Machnow is not only demonstrating that he is the tallest man in the world but that he is also the strongest. To him weights of a few hundred pounds or so are a mere nothing. The ordinary stage weights cannon balls, etc., of the strong man of the boards give him no trouble. He can easily bend steel bars as if they were fashioned of lead. Certainly a man of such enormous physical development and tremendous strength would be a great acquisition to the ordinary housewife, especially in the spring cleaning season, and it now only remains to find a suitable partner to whom he can offer his heart.

WHY IT SUCCEEDS

Because It's For One Thing Only and Buchanan is Learning This

Nothing can be good for everything. Doing one thing well brings success. Doan's kidney pills do one thing only. They are for sick kidney. They cure backache—every kidney ill. Here is evidence to prove it:

Calvin Wilson, barber, Main street, Niles, Mich., says: "Too close application to my work or too much standing very likely brought on my kidney trouble. Be that as it may, despite the use of various remedies I was unable to procure anything to give me permanent relief until I used Doan's Kidney Pills. My back has ached so much that I often felt as if I would give up my business. Other symptoms of acute kidney trouble existed, particularly weakness which annoyed me at night. I obtained three boxes of Doan's kidney pills and they cured me. I thoroughly believe they will do as much for anyone else who tried them."

Plenty more proof like this from Buchanan people. Call at W. N. Brodrick's drug store and ask what his customers report.
