FRIDAY'S BALL GAME

Won By Paw-Paw By a Score of 5 to 6

SEEN BY A LARGE CROWD

Fully Six Hundred People Were in Attendance

The much talked of ball game between Buchanan and Paw-Paw took place on the local diamond last Friday afternoon. Both teams had been strengthened by the addition of good players, and the crowd was expecting to see a battle royal, in this expectation they were not disappointed. The game was called at three o'clock with Paw-Paw at bat.

The first two innings were played without either team making a score. In the 3rd Paw-Paw succeeded in crossing the plate twice, while Buchanan in their half of the 3rd landed five scores. The next inning saw both teams die before finding the way home. In the 5th and 7th the visitors nailed two scores each, while the Blues for some reason, were detained before they could speed down the home stretch.

Smith was in the box for Buchanan and pitched one of the finest games ever seen on the local field. His work would have won the game for Buchanan had it not been for one or two errors made by the team at critical points.

The score was as follows:
Innings 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 Runs
Paw Paw 0 0 2 0 2 0 2 0 0 — 6
Buchanan 0 0 5 0 0 0 0 0 0 — 7

Brodrick made the star play of the game in a long run from 1st, pulling in a fly fowl.

Boyle received a great many favorable comments upon his excellent work behind the bat.

Paw Paw could not help but win the game, they played with eleven men. Umpire Marshall and Iceman Carter helped them out.

Niles had a large delegation over to see the game. They don't play ball in Niles, but knowing a good thing, they come to Buchanan when they want to see a good game.

Umpire Fred Marshall, of Niles, is a nice fellow all right, and should not be roasted for his rank decisions. Fact is, Niles sees so little base ball, that a Niles man makes a poor umpire, he don't understand the game you see.

Next Friday the Oronoko ball team will play the Buchanan Blues on the local grounds. The Oronoko team has been playing great ball this year and a good game is assured. The admission will be 10 and 20 cents.

The Ball Game Saturday

The baseball game last Saturday between the Buchanan Cabinet Works and the Geo. R. Rich Mfg. Company, proved to be a remarkably well contested game, being won after twelve innings of hard playing by the Cabinet Works boys by a score of 7 to 6. The game early resolved itself into a pitchers battle and the support accorded was extremely good for players with so little practice. The crowd, while not large, was very enthusiastic and was given several opportunities to applaud meritorious plays. The score:
Innings 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12
Cab't. Co. 0 0 0 2 0 1 2 0 0 0 2 — 7
Rich Co. 1 0 0 1 0 0 2 0 1 0 0 1 — 6

Batteries: Van Rogers and Boynton, Berry and Havreneck! Umpire Brant.
Hostilities will be resumed between the Rich Company and the Axle Works the coming Saturday and a fierce battle is looked for.

He Tried Murder

Town Marshal Was Unlocking Cell When Sanders Fired at Him

Sheriff Joseph Tephant, leading a posse of deputies, Thursday night scoured the lake shore in the vicinity of Stevensville in search of Fred Sanders, a fugitive who had attempted to murder Marshal John Yank. Sanders was captured while attempting to board an outgoing freight-train. He had been taken in custody as a suspicious character for having a quantity of jewelry upon his person. As Yank was unlocking the cell door the prisoner bolted and, being pursued, he turned upon the marshal and fired a shot from a revolver point blank. The bullet grazed the officer's face. "Come on if you want me," was the challenge of Sanders, and he walked away in the darkness.

For nearly two hours the fugitive eluded the posse, keeping himself well hidden in the fields bordering the railroad track. He was captured attempting to board a south bound freight train. The revolver was found in his pocket but all the cartridges had been extracted. He denies having fired the shot.

Sanders is one of the most interesting prisoners brought to the county jail this summer. He carried a small grip and it was packed with a stock of jewelry, cutlery, tools and drugs to stock a small sized junk shop. In the case was four watches, two being valuable gold watches. In addition there was a number of new pocket knives, razors, files, spectacles, opera glasses, scissors, needles, pins, leather cases and some Indian medicine. It was because of his suspicious actions coupled with the amount of jewelry he was carrying with him that the village marshal took Sanders into custody.

The prisoner declares that he is a jeweler by trade and that unable to work at his trade because of failing eye sight he had collected a small stock and was traveling through the country selling the articles.

Niles Firm in Suit Accuses Woman of Fraud

Niles, Aug. 18.—Carl J. Fox and Harry L. Fox, constituting the dry good firm of A. J. Fox & Sons, have begun suit in the Cass county circuit court against Mrs. Anna Dougan of Niles and her brother, Peter Smith, of Topeka, Kansas.

Judgement was rendered last April in favor of the plaintiffs for $246. They then took a transcript to the circuit court of Berrien county, from which execution was issued to the sheriff of Cass county, who levied on a farm belonging to the defendant consisting of fifty acres.

The claim on which the judgment was based was under date of April 10, 1902, and was for merchandise.

It is the claim of the plaintiffs that Mrs. Dougan, for the purpose of defrauding their creditors transferred the property in Pokagon township to her brother, and that the latter connived for the purpose of such fraud, and that no consideration was given for the property in question, but that the principal defendant has continued to exercise all the property rights in the same, such as collecting the rents and paying taxes.

The plaintiff asks that the deed be set aside and that the land be held for payment of the judgment of $246 and the costs in the suit.
Burns & Sweet are attorneys for the plaintiff's.

IN-MEMORIAM

FRANK HUFF
Frank Huff, son of Geo. Huff Sr. and his wife Lousia, nee Umphrey was born on June 3, 1879, at the Huff farm 3 miles northwest of the village of Buchanan. His early life was spent on the farm, receiving his schooling at the Broceus school.

About three years ago he came to the village and went to work in the Axle Works. Here he worked steadily until taken with his fatal illness. His last position was operator of one of the hub machines. About two years ago his parents moved to Buchanan, occupying the house on the corner of Portage street and Dewey avenue, and Frank made his home with them during this time. Frank was of a genial, jolly disposition. He knew how to make friends and keep them. Wherever he could help he was willing to do so. During his sickness he showed his appreciation of the interest of his friends very much and when unable to speak any more, he made them feel his welcome by a smile and the raising of his eyebrows. He had not been feeling well for some time, but no serious alarm for him was felt until four weeks ago last Wednesday while at work, at about 8:00 a. m. he was taken with severe hemorrhages. From that time on he steadily grew worse until he slept away easily and peacefully at 10:05 a. m., Wednesday August 16, 1905. The cause of death being acute pulmonary tuberculosis. During his sickness he did not seem to suffer much nor to realize how sick he was. He was hopeful of recovery until the last and not until 7:00 o'clock of the morning of his death did he give expression of the realization that his hours were numbered.

His death proved a great shock to his family and friends. He leaves to mourn his loss, his aged parents, three brothers, Chas., George and Guy, four sisters; Mrs. Geo. Swift, Mrs. John Camp, Misses Elizabeth and Verna Huff, besides a host of other relatives and friends.

The funeral services were held from the Evangelical church on Saturday, August 19 at 2:00 p. m., Rev. J. A. Halumhuber officiating.
We extend to the bereaved ones our sincere sympathies and pray for them the comfort and support of the divine providence.

Public is Aroused
The public is aroused to a knowledge of the curative merits of that great medicinal tonic, Electric Bitters, for sick stomach, liver and kidneys. Mary H. Walters, of 546 St. Clair Ave., Columbus, O., writes: "For several months, I was given up to die. I had fever and ague, my nerves were wrecked; I could not sleep, and my stomach was so weak, from useless doctors' drugs, that I could not eat. Soon after beginning to take Electric Bitters, I obtained relief, and in a short time I was entirely cured." Guaranteed at any drug store, price 50c.

THE CHUTES

Chicago's Most Popular Public Park

In the wonderful life of Chicago nothing is of more interest than The Chutes. This brilliantly lighted, flag-enshrouded park at Jackson Boulevard and Kedzie Avenue is an ideal resort for gay throngs. Within its enclosure the "Velvet Coaster" gives thrilling mid-air rides. High overhead a marvelous flying machine offers hazardous adventure to the multitude. "Shooting the Chutes" is a Chicago habit. Passengers go skyward on a gigantic steel structure. At a dizzy height gondolas start down a steep declivity over which rush cascades like the famous falls of Lorede.

The gay craft descend with the speed of the winds to the bosom of an artificial lake where they dash swiftly forward on foam-crested waves to a placid harbor. While Weldon's big funilary band fills the park with music, rubber wheel cars laden with shouting, laughing merry-makers descend on undulating tracks like noiseless phantoms from a distant planet.

High overhead fly the machines of the Aerostat at a rate of 100 miles an hour. Were these devices not enough to delight, there are the Mystic Rill, an enchanted waterway, with boats that speed by "poppy fields" and "hanging gardens" peopled with fairies and genie; through a phantom "Zoo" that weirdly vanishes and strangely reappears; past a miniature world's fair; a haunted house that turns up-side-down; a mystifying radium cavern; "Psyche at the Well"; laughing gallery of comical anamorphoses; electric theatre; motion pictures, Katzenjammer Castle, Figure Eight Toboggan, "Baby" railroad, double whirl, merry-go-rounds, giant carousels, Helter-Skelter, temples of palmistry, fortune-telling and clairvoyance, Japanese daylight fire-works, pyrotechnics by night and a thousand other devices. Seated in cool pavilions under a canopy of fluttering flags and myriads of vari-colored lights, patrons enjoy open air concerts and all these gay activities. For access to this world of amusement only ten cents is charged. All street cars transfer to the Chutes for one fare.

The Wedding at St. Ann's

By EDWARD MARSDEN COOKE
Copyright, 1907, by American Press Association

AS Leonard Hopkins mounted the steps of the club he met old General Dodge coming down, and there was something very attractive about the way the younger man lent his assistance across the icy pavement to the veteran. Other men might have done the same thing, but not in just the same way, and the old man felt it and smiled to himself as he drove away, muttering something about "Hopkins' boy" being an uncommonly fine fellow. These young men all occupied places in his mind as somebody's boys.

Up in the hall above the man who took Hopkins' hat and coat felt warmed by the kindness of his manner. The servants always felt that way about him after they got accustomed to the sternness of his face. It did not matter that they had no business to note the difference in their treatment by those who commanded their services. The fact was that they did, and tonight the stolid looking servant noticed that Mr. Hopkins' face was even more austere than usual, and he felt, too, that the other thing, the thing that somehow or other would raise Mr. Hopkins up above the plane occupied by the other members of the club, was more marked than ordinarily.

As Hopkins passed on into the room a man stopped him and exchanged a few words with him about an engagement which, he said, circumstances forced him to break, and then went away thinking what a very disagreeable fellow Hopkins was, and it was some minutes later before his sense of justice added to the harsh verdict the saying word "sometimes."

The fact was that Leonard Hopkins was very much out of sorts, as he put it to himself. It was characteristic of him in a moody fit to be especially courteous to old General Dodge and particularly considerate of the servant and, in his quiet way, viciously disagreeable to the first man of his own age and degree whom he met. He felt that the man was fair prey, and he made the most of it and seemed pacified by it afterward and sorry the next day.

Hopkins walked back through the rooms to one in the rear and took a seat at a table where Russell Carroll and Philip Maltby were chatting and smoking, and they hailed him pleasantly and looked at their watches and went on with their talk. The three had met by agreement to go to the church together, where they were to perform the duties of ushers at the marriage of their old friend, Tom Borroughs. A young fellow with a noticeably good natured face and a bunch of violets on his coat sauntered up and, leaning over Hopkins' chair, made some light and some rather serious remarks about the wedding and joined with Carroll and Maltby in saying nice things about Miss Fielding and metaphorically patting Tom Borroughs on the back, very tenderly for men, and Hopkins sat silently flicking the ashes from his cigarette and carefully tilting a glass that stood on the table until the liquor ran down close to the edge and threatened to fall on the table and did not.

Finally the man with the good natured face turned to go and paused to say in parting:

"Well, for those who like weddings this is the kind of a wedding they ought to like. There is something about it that makes one feel comfortable all over. I really don't believe there is even an old aunt to come up from the country and wear queer clothes and spoil the artistic effect." And he laughed and went away, and Hopkins turned slightly in his chair and watched him go, smiling in a perfunctory sort of way until Maltby attracted his attention with an abrupt, "Well, what is the matter with you?" and Hopkins replied with an attempted laugh:

"Oh, nothing—that is, not much. I need something to drink—something like brandy, say." And he called a waiter, while Carroll nuzzled something about being glad that he knew what he needed, and Maltby added a vicious thrust about the man who took weddings seriously, and they all laughed and emptied the glasses.

"I am not going to have anything but smiles about this thing tonight," continued Maltby. "I am in a measure responsible for its success and propose to see it go off with the flags flying and the band playing, and so on. It will be time enough tomorrow for you to think about the difference between Borroughs the bachelor and Borroughs married."

"Oh, it was not Tom I was thinking of," responded Hopkins thoughtfully; "it was another. Well, whatever it was, I'll think of something else. You see, I have been rubbed the wrong way today. I went down with the governor to see his patients in the slums, and if there was anything that was grewsome or pitiful or sorry that we overlooked it must have been out for the day. Then I went to the Parkhills' to dinner—just a plain dinner, as they are always telling you; no wine and not very much to eat and, by way of conversation, a good deal of wandering around among the skeletons and tombstones of the past and protests against the present and proposed dodgings of the future, and so on. I know that they are awfully nice people, and I am sorry

For their misfortunes, and sometimes I do not mind their dinners. But it all went against the grain today." And Hopkins pushed his chair back impatiently and rose to go, the others following him example.

"St. Ann's church, Belden," Hopkins called to the coachman as he followed his two friends into the carriage, and when they were seated Carroll threw his head back, laughing heartily, and commenced a story to explain the fun of it, when Hopkins interrupted him in a queer sort of way as if he were talking partly to himself and partly to some one outside of the window.

"I forgot to say," he began in a low tone, "that between the slums and the Parkhills I saw a ghost—that is, a first cousin to a ghost. I thought it was dead, and I wish it was, and it ought to be and it is not."

And Carroll said very sharply, "Nonsense!" and Maltby leaned forward and asked hastily, "What do you mean?"

Hopkins studied the burning end of his cigarette with careful attention before replying and then said slowly, "I have about decided not to go into that," and he looked out of the window again as if he were searching for something else to talk about, and then, facing them, he added quickly: "Still, I have begun, and I want to tell you fellows about it. Five years ago when I went to New York on the street railway

"I met him here on the street today," business that turned out so badly for us all I met Agnes Fielding. That was long before Tom Borroughs had seen her. She was even prettier then than now, and she had more of the attractive enthusiasm and innocence and freshness of young girlhood about her. I fancy most men would like the worldly wise Miss Fielding of today much better than the one I first knew, but I don't. The way she shook hands with me made me like her, and what I came to know of her in the next few months only strengthened my first impression. Now—but that is not a part of my story. If Tom had turned up there then and fallen in love with her we would not be going to his wedding tonight; at least not with her in the leading role. You see, she was in love with another man then, and, if I reckon the thing right, our friend Tom would have been turned away very promptly and would probably have gone to Africa or some other outlandish place for solace. Men who fell in love with the Agnes Fielding of those days did not forget it very easily or very soon, and they were apt to go off at a tangent.

"You remember Harry Goodloe at Princeton, don't you? Of course you do—that giant fellow from Pittsburg; a senior in our first year. Well, he was the lucky man in this case. He was a fine sight in the way of a man to look at. His father died about the time I went to New York and left Harry a big pile. If I had been a girl I don't know any man it would have been easier for me to fall in love with than Goodloe. And he had, with his good looks and money, a lot of brains, too—good stuff all through and a fine prospect for making a handsome name for himself as an electrical expert. Harry and Miss Fielding were always together, and everybody said they were engaged. I don't know whether it had gone that far or not, but I saw enough of them to know that they were desperately in it with each other.

"One day Goodloe went out to look over and report on a new electrical plant at Plainfield. He got engrossed in his investigations and into a place he had no business to be, among the machinery and wires. Something went wrong, and a smashup occurred. An electric current went astray, and Harry got it badly. Well, they took him to a hospital and saved his life, but when he came out the sight was gone from one of his eyes and his face was shockingly scarred, to say nothing of other injuries. He was a terrible sight, and even I, cold blooded as I am, felt the repugnance of the thing, the desire to turn away when I saw him. Miss Fielding saw him once and only once after the accident. She went to see him as soon as the doctors would allow him to see anybody. That was the end of it. When he came out of the hospital she had gone to Europe. When she came back a year ago the family thought it best not to return to New York, and, as you know, they came to Philadelphia to live. I have only seen Harry once since then. He went to the far west and to the dogs. He got down so low after he blew in all his money that I understand he dealt faro at a gambling house, when he wasn't drunk, for a living. It ruined him—physically, financially, mentally and morally. I don't know that I can blame the girl, but think of him—think of his hell on earth!"

There was a pause at the end of the story, and Maltby was the one to break the silence as the carriage stopped in front of the church door with a muttered, "Well, that is a corker," and then he whispered while Belden was opening the door: "But we must forget this thing now. Remember there is to be nothing but smiles here tonight."

The three young men hurried up through the awning in the blaze of light from the open church door. As they reached the vestibule Hopkins put a hand on the shoulder of each of his companions and drew them a step aside into the shadow and said in a low voice:

"This fellow Goodloe has not been seen in this part of the country since, but I met him here on the street today. He was worn to a shadow almost, ragged and drunk. Do you suppose his being here has anything to do with this business tonight?" And then, without waiting for an answer, he passed rapidly into the church, followed by his wondering companions.

People came to this wedding with the rush that is characteristic of weddings, and in the busy moments which followed the bridegroom's friends forgot for the time being in their duties as ushers the story told in the carriage. The big congregation had soon filled the church and sat waiting for the climax. The sea of faces and richly colored cloths and silks and furs, here and there, gleaming with silver and gold and jewels, moved incessantly in the brilliant yellow light from the vaulted roof, and the murmur from it grew more and more distinct.

Everywhere the faces were eager and happy in the coming happiness of the heroine and hero of the night, save where a mother thought of a daughter already given or to be given in marriage and the pangs of the following separation, or a husband mused on his own shortcomings since he stood up there at the altar plighting his troth. The masses of green foliage and white blossoms in the chancel waved gently in the draft from an open window and seemed to beckon the bridal party. Then from the vestry room came the bishop in the flowing robes of his high office, followed by the rector, and for a moment stillness reigned, and as they took their places before the altar the organ burst forth into solemn melody.

The bridegroom, leaning on the arm of his best friend, entered, and down the aisle marched the daintily gowned bridesmaids to meet the bride. Then slowly the procession turned as Miss Fielding entered the church upon her father's arm; and, preceded by the choristers, their youthful faces uplifted in the notes of the beautiful wedding hymn, the group of sweet young womanhood moved back toward the altar.

To The Fruit Growers of Western Michigan

The West Michigan State Fair is close at hand, Sept. 18 to 22 will soon be here. Those who have exhibited fruit in the past years are already at work and will doubtless present a fine display of the "fruit that has made Michigan famous." Those who have not exhibited heretofore are urged to begin planning now! Send to the Secretary for a premium list. Look it over. Make up your mind what you can show best. Get this fruit in to the Grand Rapids Cold Storage Co. The society will pay the storage charge. In other words; do your best to put up the best you can. Never mind whether you get a premium or not. It will do you good to compare your fruit with that of others. You will enjoy the fair more. If you have any fruit you want to know the name of, bring it with you. Ask questions; in fact make of your visit and exhibit an education, both for yourself and others. Write John B. Martin, Supt. Hort. Dept. 60 Monroe St. Grand Rapids, Mich. that you intend to exhibit, what you intend exhibit, and for any information you may want relative to your display.

It is hoped to have instruction in grading and packing apples, and possibly informal talks by experts from the Agricultural College, for an hour each morning. Take advantage of these if they will help you. With the quantity and quality of our fruit this year the display in Horticultural Hall should be a record breaker and you should help to make it so whether your exhibit be large or small.
