BLISS IS BUT A SHADOW

Long Illness Has Been Hard
for Former Governor

Saginaw, Aug. 31.—For the first time in ten weeks ex-Governor Bliss Wednesday read a newspaper. During all that time he has practically been kept in ignorance of what was going on in the outside world, save the reading to him occasionally of minor news events.

Especially have all political matters been suppressed along with things that might agitate him. It is doubtful if Mr. Bliss could name the republican candidates for senator, and he has only just been told of the nomination of Warner and his democratic opponent. His interest in politics however, is keen as ever, and the first thing he did when a newspaper was handed to him, was to search the political columns for news of his friends. His doctor, however, would permit him to make no comments on what he read or engage in any discussion. He is emaciated and weighs but 80 pounds.

PORTZ will do all these things for you.
You simply come and talk it over with him.

Then you will say how easy it is and what a

do it.

MAKES TEETH OF BONE

Clever Convict Pulls Aching Molars and Makes New Ones

Columbus, O., Aug. 31.—Self dentistry is the innovation of a colored convict named Charles Bennett, who is immured in the Ohio penitentiary
for burglary.

Two decayed teeth were removed in a primitive way. A violin string was tied about their ends, the loose end of the cord being fastened to a bed. The bed was lifted up and allowed to drop, the pull taking out the offending molars. Plaster casts were then made of them. Securing a bit of beef bone from the kitchen and using a pocket knife and a rat-tail file Bennett succeeded in duplicating the teeth.

These are grooved so that they fit
to the gum and also to the teeth on either side. A fit was secured on the first attempt.

Twice within two hours Friday evening fire was discovered in the tailor shop of M. J. McHall, of Pontiac, in the Dawson block, on the same floor on which are located the city offices. The first blaze was at 6 o'clock. A tailor's goose had been left on a lighted gas plate, and slipping off while overheated, set fire to the woodwork. The blaze was extinguished with little loss. Two hours later the department was called to the same place, where fire had broken out again, this time from some unknown cause. It was again extinguished.

For several hours Friday a strong electrical current burned Isaac William's neck, and when his body was discovered the head was nearly burned off. Williams was a miner in the Shiawasee mine near Saginaw, and operated an electric drill in a room
by himself. In some way his neck fell across a part of the drill which was heavily charged, and there it still rested when he was found. Death was probably instantaneous.

James Vallier, one of the prisoners who escaped from the jail at Manistique, Tuesday evening, by sawing his way out, was killed by a posse
near Seulchox Thursday night.
Van Auken, wanted at many places

for passing fraudulent checks, was recaptured near the scene of the killing.

Despondent over being a victim of the drink habit, Joe Smith, a familiar street character of Allegan, wandered into a livery barn Friday, and securing a bottle of horse medicine, determined to take his life. A big swallow, of the strong linament secured the desired result, for Smith died in agonies shortly after. He was unmarried and 40 years old.

While Leander Harvey and M. D.
Faulds, of Bently, were digging a well on the Harvey farm Thursday, Harvey was overcome with gas and was nearly dead when pulled to the surface. Faulds went down to investigate and fell unconscious also.
Coal gas was the cause. Coal in paying quantities near the surface is assured, and a shaft will be sunk at once.

Dr. A. L. Walker, a wealthy and influential citizen of Ann Arbor, took a dose of Pratt's chlorides by mistake, Wednesday, and died Friday morning. Some time ago he suffered a stroke of apoplexy, and this weakened his eyesight. He mistook the poison bottle for a simple remedy he was in the habit of taking. He was 67 years of age and lived in Salem township all his life.

South Bend's Progressive Clothing Store.

We'd like to say a word about the progress this store has made within the past year.

We have gone right ahead and have sold more clothing than in any previous year.

But we don't count that as anything wonderful. It will always be so, because we do not sell anything that is not calculated to bring the customer back.

The right kind of clothing and the justness of the price, are two of the best things about this store.

An enthusiastic salesman's guarantee may or may not stand for quality. If the value is not in the stuff itself, the guarantee doesn't put it there. Sharp eyes and good business judgement in selecting the stock, is what puts the right kind of clothing on our customers, we see that the value is there before we ask you to put good money into it.

To be sure, even experts are sometimes deceived. In all such cases, however, this store would rather pay a premium to have the goods returned, than have the customer keep them.

Let the quality of the goods we sell and the good service we are able to give you, be the reason for your trading here.

Among the literary features are the "The Haunted Castles of Europe," by John de Mogan, two short stories "The Royalist," by John Justin Cummings, and "The Face in the Mirror," by Zelia Margaret Walters, and "The Village Improvement Society" which comes to a termination amid most exciting events. President Roosevelt will add new words to the list as fast as the committee recommends them.

SOME NEW SPELLING

President Roosevelt Adopts Reform in Public Printing Office.

For years there has been a movement among the leading educators of U. S. to make English orthography more uniform. It has met with considerable advancement, the leading educational journals now nearly all using the shorter and easier spelling.

As it is, not one person in a hundred can spell with certainty the names of the things that he daily handles. Nor can one person in a good many write a simple friendship letter and spell all the words according to the dictionary. It will take sometime to make the change, but if the spelling were uniform and according to sound, children in school would not have to spend years in learning the difficult task, which not one in ten thousand thoroughly accomplishes.

More than that, if all the superfluous letters were omitted, every English book would be shortened one-seventh, and the work in getting it up reduced by the same proportion—equivalent to giving the printers a holiday a week.

Last winter Andrew Carnegie donated $15,000 a year for five years to be used in simplifying the English spelling. The first practical result is the adoption of a list of 800 words chosen by a committee of leading educators, which has been adopted for use in the government printing office.

The list includes words like theatre, centre, etc. and are changed to theater, center, etc. Such words as judgement, are changed to judgment. Wherever there is a question about doubling an l, it is made single as fulfil. The needless ugh has been dropped from though, thorough and their compounds, making them tho, thoro, thoro fare, altho etc. Through is "spelt" thru, thruout etc. The past tense of many verbs like spelled, kissed and blushed are changed to the ordinary pronunciation, kist, spelt, blusht.

Rhyme becomes rime; mamma, mama; lacrymal, lacrimal; hiccough, hiccup; anaesthetic, anesthetic; subpoena, subpoena; and jaol, jail.

The final ue is left off tongue pedagogue, catalogue etc., also the final te from quartette, coquette etc. Where there is a difficulty in remembering whether it is a i or y as in scythe and dyke the i is given the preference as scithe and dike.

Words heretofore spelled with an ou as colour, labour and neighbor etc., have mostly been modified by dropping th u, and that is actioned by the reformers.

Where words have an ending as comprise, criticise etc. the s is changed to z making them all uniform.

The final me that clings occasionally to programme, gramme etc. has been cut off.

After one has been a quarter of a century acquiring a fancy spelling like plough when plov would be easier and planer; and milch instead of milk, he dislikes to learn all over again. But for the sake of his children and his children's children, the sacrifice (or is it sacrifice) is worth the price, especially when one considers that after 20, 30, 40 or even 50 years of diligent effort he has not yet learned to spell a majority of words the old fantastic way.

President Roosevelt will add new words to the list as fast as the committee recommends them.

TWO GREAT BALL GAMES

Played Between Three Oaks and Buchanan Yesterday.

BUCHANAN WINS THE SERIES

Large Crowds Witnessed Best Games Played Here This Season.

Labor Day 1906 will long be remembered by Buchanan and Three Oaks people who attended the ball games played here on that day.

A series of five games had been arranged between these two teams and Buchanan had won two of the three games played before those of yesterday.

A crowd of 400 people witnessed the morning game, and saw a fine exhibition of base ball.

The first inning gave Buchanan one run, but from that time until the game was called at the end of the 10th inning the Blues failed to find the rubber. For three innings Three Oaks did not score but in the 4th secured one run, thus tying the score. That was the end of the scoring, and from that time on until the end Harry Weaver was given plenty of practice in making white nothings.

In the eighth inning Ashby had the misfortune to have one of his fingers split open by a ball, and Crouch took his place.

In the afternoon the crowd came early and by the time the game was called, 750 people were present.

The game was called with Buchanan at bat and although several men reached second and one third, it was not until the 7th that the locals reached home. A two base hit by Boyle, a sacrifice by Roe which advanced Boyle to third, and a single by Merson which sent Boyle home was the only mark that spoiled the beautiful array of white circlelets that adorned the score board during the entire afternoon's game.

The game was full of interest and good plays from start to finish and gave the crowd plenty to yell about which they did with a right good will.

Berry made a most sensational fly catch in center field which spoiled Three Oaks chance of winning the game. It was the feature of the game, Below is the score.

"Twiddle Twiddle"

There is no room for dull care in the neighborhood of Chicago's Grand Opera House these days. Joe Weber's company, direct from his famous music hall on Broadway, New York, is dispensing fun and melody with lavish hand, "Twiddle Twiddle" is the title of this season's concoction for the Weber company. It relates the experiences and troubles of Philip Grabfelder, a millionaire sausage manufacturer of Cincinnati, who, with his daughter, is sojourning at Marienbad, for the reduction of the embonpoint of his purse and person," as the author of "Twiddle Twiddle" wittily describes the character. The play mainly revolves around the efforts of Grabfelder's daughter, Matilda, to meet some of the nobility of Europe, so when she goes back to Cincinnati she can "have the laugh on all those society snobs who wouldn't notice us in spite of all our money." It is just the work of the Grabfelders' to meet a bogus English lord whose business it is to "introduce the untitled rich of America to the titled paupers of Europe." As the Grabfelders have advanced a lot of money to the bogus lord to introduce the sausage manufacturer and his socially ambitious daughter to some of the "titled paupers" and they are becoming insistent for something to be done in return for the money, Fitz Haggis conceives the idea of passing off Capt. Schmitt, a relic of the Austrian army; as the Emperor of Austria for the purpose of introduction to Matilda Grabfelder. This is the ground plot of the production, but there are many side shifts to introduce the necessary element of heart interest and to afford relief between the many big comedy situations. For instance, the Grand Duke Josef of Austria, who is at Marienbad incognito, engages in a desperate flirtation with Gladys Dodge, the daughter of Ebenezer Dodge, the thirteenth vice president of the Equivocal Life Insurance Company. The Dodges are in Europe on account of the ill health of the wife and mother who is a believer in the absent treatment of diseases, or a treatment by proxy. She has faith that if her husband goes to Marienbad and drinks the water it will restore her to health. As a dutiful Mr. Henpeck, Dodge drinks the waters, but wants a little fun on his own account and leads Grabfelders into many ludicrous scrapes. It is just such a play as the members of Mr. Weber's company appear in to best advantage. Among the principals are Joe Weber, Amelia Summerville, Edward J. Connelly, Flora Zaballa, William Burrese, Lotta Faust, Ernest Lambert, May Ionfort, Harry Crandall, May Grant, Joseph Kaufman, Matt and Boorwm W. Douglass Stevenson, Welen Weins and Selma Mantell.

His Experience.

"In order to succeed in any line of business," said the great merchant, who was given to the habit of moralizing, "one must begin at the bottom." "I tried that," rejoined the young man with the fringed trousers, "and now I'm on my uppers."—Chicago Daily News.

THE MAN ON THE BOX

CHAPTER XXV.

A FINE HEROINE TOO.

Friday morning.
Miss Annesley possessed more than the ordinary amount of force and power of will. Though the knowledge of it was not patent to her, she was a philosopher. She always submitted gracefully to the inevitable. She was religious, too, feeling assured that God would provide. She did not go about the house, moaning and weeping; she simply studied all sides of the calamity, and looked around to see what could be saved. There were moments when she was even cheerful. There were no new lines in her face; her eyes were bright and eager. All persons of genuine talent look the world confidently in the face; they know exactly what they can accomplish. As Karloff had advised her, she did not trouble herself about the future. Her violin would support her and her father, perhaps in comfortable circumstances. The knowledge of this gave her a silent happiness, that kind which leaves upon the face a serene and beautiful calm.

At this moment she stood on the veranda, her hand shading her eyes. She was studying the sky. The afternoon would be clear; the last ride should be a memorable one. The last ride! Tears blurred her eyes and there was a smothering sensation in her throat. The last ride! After to-day Jane would have a new, strange mistress. If only she might go to this possible mistress and tell her how much she loved the animal, to obtain from her the promise that she would be kind to it always. How mysteriously the human heart spreads its tendrils around the object of its love! What is there in the loving of a dog or a horse that, losing one or the other, an emptiness is created? Perhaps it is because the heart goes out wholly without distrust to the faithful, to the undecieving, to the dumb but loving beast, which, for all its strength, is so helpless.

She dropped her hand and spoke to James, who was waiting near by for her orders.

"James, you will have Pierre fill a saddle-hammer; two plates, two knives and forks, and so forth. We shall ride in the north country this afternoon. It will be your last ride. To-morrow the horses will be sold." How bravely she said it!

"Yes, Miss Annesley." Whom were they going to meet in the north country? "At what hour shall I bring the horses around?"

"At three."
She entered the house and directed her steps to the study. She found her father arranging the morning's mail. She drew up a chair beside him, and ran through her own letters. An invitation to lunch with Mrs. Secretary-of-State; she tossed it into the wastebasket. A dinner-dance at the Country Club, a ball at the Brazilian legation, a tea at the German embassy, a box party at some coming play, an informal dinner at the executive mansion; one by one they fluttered into the basket. A bill for winter furs, a bill from the dressmaker, one from the milliner, one from the glover, and one from the florist; these she laid aside, reckoning their sum-total, and frowning. How could she have been so extravagant? She chanced to look at her father. He was staring, rather stupidly at a slip of paper which he held in his trembling fingers.

"What is it?" she asked, vaguely troubled.

"I do not understand," he said, extending the paper for her inspection.

Neither did she at first.

"Karloff has not done this," went on her father, "for it shows that he has had it discounted at the bank. It is canceled; it is paid. I did not have $20,000 in the bank; I did not have even a quarter of that amount to my credit. There has been some mistake. Our real estate agent expects to realize on the home not earlier than Monday morning. In case it was not sold then, he was to take up the note personally. This is not his work, or I should have been notified." Then, with a burst of grief: "Betty, my poor Betty! How can you forgive me? How can I forgive myself?"

"Father, I am brave. Let us forget. It will be better so."

She kissed his hand and drew it lovingly across her cheek. Then she rose and moved toward the light. She studied the note carefully. There was nothing on it save Karloff's writing and her father's and the red imprint of the bank's cancellation. Out of the window and beyond she saw James leading the horses to the watering trough. Her face suddenly grew crimson with shame, and as suddenly as it came the color faded. She folded the note and absently tucked it into the bosom of her dress. Then, as if struck by some strange thought, her figure grew tense and rigid against the blue background of the sky. The glow which stole over her features this time had no shame in it, and her eyes shone like the waters of sunlit seas. It must never be; no it must never be.

"We shall make inquiries at the bank," she said. "And do not be downcast, father, the worst is over. What mistakes you have made are forgotten. The future looks bright to me."

"Through innocent young eyes the future is ever bright, but as we age we find most of the sunshine on either side, and we stand in the shadow between. Brave heart, I glory in your courage. God will provide for you; He will not let my shadow fall on you. Yours shall be the joy of living, mine shall be the pain. God bless you! I wonder how I shall ever meet your mother's accusing eyes?"

"Father, you must not dwell upon this any longer; for my sake you must not. When everything is paid there will be a little left, enough till I and my violin find something to do. After all, the world's applause must be a fine thing. I can even now see the criticisms in the great newspapers. 'A former young society woman, well-known in the fashionable circles of Washington, made her debut as a concert player last night. She is a stunning young person.' 'A young queen of the diplomatic circles, here and abroad, appeared in public as a violinist last night. She is a member of the most exclusive sets, and society was out to do her homage.' 'One of Washington's brilliant young horsewomen, and so forth. Away down at the bottom of the column, somewhere, they will add that I play the violin rather well for an amateur.' In all her trial, this was the one bitter expression, and she was sorry for it the moment it escaped her.

Happily her father was not listening. He was wholly absorbed in the mystery of the canceled note.

She had mounted Jane and was gathering up the reins, while James strapped on the saddle-hammer. This done, he climbed into the saddle and signified by touching his cap that all was ready. So they rode forth in the sweet freshness of that November afternoon. A steady wind was blowing, the compact white clouds sailed swiftly across the brilliant heavens, the leaves whispered and fluttered, hither and thither, wherever the wind listed; it was the day of days. It was the last ride, and fate owed them the compensation of a beautiful afternoon.

The last ride! Warburton's mouth drooped. Never again to ride with her! How the thought tightened his heart! What a tug it was going to be to give her up! But so it must be. He could never face her gratitude. He must disappear, like the good fairies in the story-books. If he left now, and she found out what he had done, she would always think kindly of him, even tenderly. At twilight, when she took out her violin and played soft measures, perhaps a thought or two would be given to him. After what had happened—this contemptible masquerading and the crisis through which her father had just passed—it would be impossible for her to love him. She would always regard him with suspicion, as a witness of her innocent shame.

He recalled the two wooden plates in the hamper. Whom was she going to meet? Ah, well, what mattered it? After to-day the abyss of eternity would yawn between them. How he loved her! How he adored the exquisite profile, the warm-tinted skin, the shining hair! . . . And he had lost her! Ah, that last ride!

The girl was holding her head high because her heart was full. No more to ride on a bright morning, with the wind rushing past her, bringing the odor of the grasses, of the flowers, of the earth to tingle her nostrils; no more to follow the hounds on a winter's day, with the pack baying beyond the hedges, the gay, red-coated riders sweeping down the field; no more to wander through the halls of her mother's birthplace and her own! Like a breath on a mirror, all was gone. Why? What had she done to be flung down ruthlessly? She, who had been brought up in idleness and luxury, must turn her hands to a living! Without being worldly, she knew the world. Once she appeared upon the stage, she would lose caste among her kind. True, they would tolerate her, but no longer would her voice be heard or her word have weight.

Soon she would be tossed about on the whirl-pool and swallowed up. Then would come the haggling with managers, long and tiresome journeys, gloomy hotels and indifferent fare, curious people who desired to see the one-time fashionable belle; her portraits would be lithographed and hung up in shop-windows, in questionable resorts, and the privacy so loved by gentlewomen gone; and perhaps there would be insults. And she was only on the threshold of the twenties, the radiant, blooming twenties!

During the long ride (for they covered something like seven miles) not a word was spoken. The girl was bidding her time; the man had nothing to voice. They were going through the woods, when they came upon a clearing through which a narrow brook lolled or sallied down the incline. She reined in and raised her crop. He was puzzled. So far as he could see, he and the girl were alone. The third person, for whom he reasoned he had brought the second plate, was nowhere in sight.

A flat boulder lay at the side of the stream, and she nodded toward it. Warburton emptied the hamper and spread the cloth on the stone. Then he laid out the salad, the sandwiches, the olives, the almonds, and two silver telescope-cups. All the time not a single word from either; Warburton, busied with his task, did not lift his eyes to her.

The girl had laid her face against Jane's nose, and two lonely tears trailed slowly down her velvety cheeks. Presently he was compelled to look at her and speak.

"Everything is ready, Miss." He spoke huskily. The sight of her tears gave him an indescribable agony.

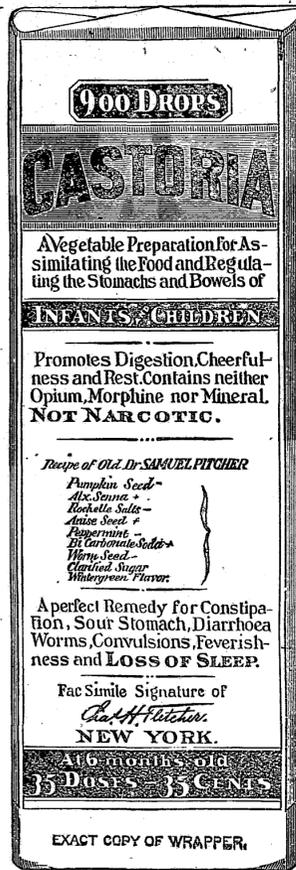

She dropped the bridle reins, brushed her eyes, and the sunshine of a smile broke through the troubled clouds.

"Mr. Warburton," she said gently, "let us not play any more. I am too sad. Let us hang up the masks, for the comedy is done."
