LAUREL KENT BOYLE

Laurel Kent, son of Elton R. and Hertha F. Boyle, was born at Galien, Michigan, July 10th, 1926, and died July 4th, 1926, at the age of 12 years, 11 months and 25 days.

At the age of six months he had acute bronchitis which left him afflicted with heart trouble that eventually after many very serious illnesses caused his death.

He was of a very kind and loving disposition and everyone was his friend. Always a good word for everyone and loved to visit with his friends.

Kent, on account of his very poor health was unable to start to school until at the age of 8 years. He made his grade every year although never was able to attend but a small portion of each term. This was accomplished by his insisting, even though he was not able to walk the short distance, to be hauled to school in his wagon and by studying while ill in bed.

Never being able to run and play like other boys he had to content himself by watching the other boys and sitting quiet. When asked how he felt he always replied, "Pretty good." He never complained. When having attacks with his heart he would, on rare occasions say, "Oh, Mother, why does it have to be like this," and then assure his mother that he would be alright.

On the afternoon of July 4th, he was in the best of spirits and went to the ball game with his father. In the evening his request was to go to Barron lake to see the fire works. While seated in the car waiting for the event to begin, he was stricken and was rushed to the home of his grandparents in Niles, where he died after a brief attack of heart trouble.

Besides a host of friends, and relatives he leaves his mother and father, one brother, Reginald, and grandparents to mourn his death. One brother, Everett Garth, having preceded him in death several years ago.

Funeral services were conducted at the home Sunday afternoon with the Rev. J. W. McKnight of-

MODERN CITIES MAY ELIMINATE GROWING PAINS

PROPER PLANNING REDUCES COST OF GOVERNMENT AND GIVES CITIZEN BARGAIN.

Teaching a community how to grow is one of the businesses that has evolved from this machine age.

Towns and cities are no longer as self contained as they were; their prosperity and development depend to a large degree on the prosperity of an entire area.

This has brought about the widespread application of city planning and its big brother, regional planning.

Governmental agencies authorities or qualified agencies authorized or qualified to do the work for a city and its environs rarely exist. Whatever is to be accomplished must come through the activities of the citizens themselves who can be most effective through the medium of the city or regional planning body.

Of all the problems that the community of today has to face, that of the automobile and its attendant demands is of most concern. The travel fluidity of the car has caused the suburb and outlying districts to blossom. Adequate traffic arteries must be built and certainly there must be some directing agency to see that they are built and built where there is the most need.

Not all, of course, but most communities, are growing with fair rapidity. Many are growing at a fast pace, as Miami, for example, whose population has increased 125 per cent since 1925. In fact a score of cities and towns grew without intelligent direction. Streets for the most part were confined to that age-old four-road width. Without proper guidance, growing communities will find themselves still laying out the same old narrow routes which became inadequate about the time blacksmiths began giving up the ax for automobile tools.

The city or regional planning commission is usually placed under the direction of an expert who is conversant with all the problems that go with community growth. He cooperates with all of the several local governing bodies to be found in any community. Through his suggestion and leadership a good look is taken at the future and then preparations are made for it.

This may seem somewhat as a luxury to the citizen and taxpayer, but the attainments of planning commissions indicate that through early consideration of inevitable problems, the citizen will not only be saved but he will be enabled to live in a better, more comfortable city.

GIRLS' SCHOOL SOLICITS FUNDS

HERE SATURDAY

BLUE BIRD TAG SALE FOR THE SUNNYCREST SCHOOL.

Arrangements are being made for a Blue Bird Tag sale in Buchanan next Saturday, July 13, to benefit Sunnycrest School for Girls which is located at Holland, Mich. Sunnycrest is a home and school of opportunity for girls who are homeless. The aim of the workers is to provide such a home as will give to each child a joyous, happy girlhood to educate the mind and heart; to bring her to womanhood pure and good with a knowledge of herself and an appreciation of the moral, intellectual, spiritual and economic value of woman; to provide ample opportunity for self-expression, recognizing the importance of early self-government while giving the regular academic work and vocational training.

The work is non-sectarian, state wide and supported by voluntary gifts. The school is located on Macatawa Bay, two miles west of Holland on U. S. 31. There are seventeen acres of land in connection with the school all under cultivation. It is an ideal spot for a girl's home and school. Sunnycrest admits girls from five to fourteen years of age. There is an increasing demand upon the school for admission from all parts of the state and it is hoped that another cottage may be added soon to meet this demand. Gifts for the Blue Bird tags Saturday will be received at the Sunnycrest school at its kind for girls in Michigan. Girls are taught to be self-supporting and finally placed in good positions.

BEE KEEPERS BATTLE WITH INSPECTORS

Resist Destruction of Swarms Which are Infected with Foul Brood.

William Gladin and William Priest, bee keepers of Chickaming township, will be tried in the local Justice Court July 11 on a charge of having interfered with the activities of state inspectors who had condemned swarms for foul brood.

The inspection was made by Deputy Inspector Lavelle Sherburns, who had pronounced individual swarms to be infected with American foul brood and was about to destroy them in conformity with state law when the owners are alleged to have interfered. Since the state inspectors cannot enforce their verdicts without the aid of the regular officers, a complaint was sworn against the two bee men by Inspector M. P. LeMunyon of the Berrien-Cass district. Both defendants appeared and pleaded not guilty. The apirary of the latter was the last to be inspected in Chickaming. The specific charge against them was that they had prevented the destruction by burning of honey and honey frames in condemned hives.

American foul brood is a serious menace to all bees of the district where it is found, according to LeMunyon and the only effective step in prevention is to burn the bees, and all fixtures and honey within the hives leaving only the hive itself, which is treated by pouring kerosene over the interior and burning it off, or scorching it with a blow torch.

In case the swarm infected by foul brood is permitted to live, it will be gradually weakened because of the fact that no new brood is raised, until finally it becomes so run down that the bees from other swarms break in and steal the infected honey, spreading the disease far and wide.

The first law providing for inspection for foul brood in Michigan was passed in 1913, but the inspector was empowered only to designate swarms infected, the responsibility of destruction being left entirely to the owner. It was found that too often the owner would not thoroughly destroy all fixtures and honey from the hive, and that the disease was gaining ground. As a consequence, in 1927, the state legislature empowered the inspector to clean up the apiaries.

The work was started here in 1928 with six inspectors working in Cass and Berrien counties. As the result of a thorough campaign of extermination, the amount of foul brood was greatly reduced, until this year only about 25 per cent as many infected swarms have been found to date. The work is being done this year by only two inspectors, LeMunyon and Sherburne.

Krohn Differentials Stop Power Loss From Spinning

(Continued from Page 1) car owners, many truck operators and engineers, it is not new in service. It has been successfully used since 1924 and has been quietly distributed to fleet owners who were having trouble making rear ends stand up in particularly arduous service. Now plans are being made to widen the distribution of Krohn Differentials, to manufacture them on a quantity production basis, to place the device on the replacement market and offer it to manufacturers for original equipment in trucks, passenger cars and busses.

The Krohn Differential, like the conventional type that has been used for years, permits one wheel to turn faster than its mate rounding a corner. It lets one wheel turn if that wheel is jacked up, but, it does not allow one wheel to spin idly, robbing the other of power, when driving on wet paved roads, through mud or over roads that are slippery with snow and ice.

From time to time various specially designed differentials have made their appearance, but these have usually been locking types or intricate mechanisms having more disadvantage than advantages. But the Krohn Differential does not lock. It does not compel the wheels to turn at the same rate of speed, nor is it all complicated. And while it permits a wheel that is jacked up to turn freely, it utilizes the slightest retardation, even the friction of rubber on wet ice, and employs this resistance to direct the engine power to the wheel having traction.

How It Works The three simple working parts of the Krohn Differential are shown in the central part of the illustration. The two halves of the case are at the right and left. A ring gear is mounted on the case, just as with any differential, and the rotation of the case is imparted to the central gear. This, in turn, transmits rotation to the other two gears which are splined on the two drive shafts.

The differential action is obtained, when traction varies, by a difference in the number of teeth gears. This allows slight rotation of one driving wheel with respect to the other which is necessary when rounding corners. It does not, however, allow complete freedom of rotation of either driving wheel with respect to the other. And it is this fact which prevents wheel spinning and insures getting power to the wheel that has traction.

In operating a truck, tractor, bus or pleasure car, this action becomes automatic. The slightest tendency to slip is handled by the Krohn Differential before it causes actual slipping. The flow of power is thus constantly directed to the wheel that can use it and the truck becomes seemingly more powerful, shows greater chains. Slidding is almost unknown where Krohn Differentials are used, for they eliminate its cause—loss of traction when accelerating or stopping. In accelerating, the proper distribution of power lets each wheel hold the road. And when brakes are applied the same mechanical action that distributed the power acts to prevent locking one wheel, even when equalization is poor. A most interesting feature of Unemployment, England's Trouble.

Unemployment, with more than a million skilled and willing workers idle, and the business stagnation associated with that condition will claim first attention as Ramsay MacDonald assumes his burdens as prime minister of England. His natural sympathies are with the working people with whom he has been associated. He knows the privation and suffering they have endured. He knows their eagerness to find employment, and the impossibility under present conditions. He knows the decay of manhood, forced into unwilling idleness, dependent on the dole. He must have had those thoughts in mind as he pointed out, immediately after election, that the export trade of England must be revived. That would mean employment in production and if enough employment could be secured, idleness would vanish, the terrifying problem of England would be solved.

England's post-war heritage of business stagnation has been one of the most dreadful experiences of modern times. She is a merchant and manufacturer. She purchases raw materials and sells the finished product. That makes her industrial, in that field she has won her greatness. Her skilled workers were the equal of any found, her merchandising genius was admitted. With business gone, mills were idle, workmen unemployed, the gloom of misery and suffering settled about her industrial centers. It has lasted for years, a dreadful and destructive experience. The situation opens to the new Labor government its greatest opportunity and calls for its constructive genius and leadership. The world honors that Premier MacDonald and his associates will win and the applause of other nations will be for them if they master the difficulties presented.

Edison and His Lamp

It was on Oct. 21, 50 years ago, that Thomas A. Edison, after weeks of tireless, relentless experimenting, during which he slept on a work bench with a resistance box for a pillow, produced his first successful incandescent lamp with a filament of carbonized sewing cotton which was sealed in an exhausted glass bulb and which glowed triumphantly for 40 hours. "None of us could go to bed," Edison said years later. "We just sat and watched it with anxiety and growing elation."

The foremost authorities of the day, among them such eminent physicians as Preece and Tyndall, had declared the "substitution of the electric light" a will-o'-the-wisp. At once Edison became the "wizard" that he has ever since remained. Some conception of the enthusiasm that his achievement aroused may be formed when it is recalled that special trains carried 3000 people from New York to Menlo Park, N. J., to see the first public demonstration, on Dec. 31, 1879, of a method of illumination which was destined to have a profound effect on society.

It was more than an electric lamp that Edison invented. To make his filament generally useful—experiments with 6000 materials had led him to substitute bamboo for cotton—he had to design virtually the entire central station apparatus as we know it, dynamo of a modified type to generate energy; a transmission and distribution system, sockets for lamps and meters. He not only solved the theoretically unsolvable but made the electric current, the servant of man. Before his Pearl Street station, first of modern power houses, was completed, New York's largest source of electric energy was a battery of 2000 cells installed by the Western Union Telegraph Co.

Edison has lived to see electricity transform cities, farms, homes and industry. Bold as was his prediction of the social and economic effects that would follow the introduction of the electric lamp, he probably never foresaw avenues transformed into luminous fairy lanes and crime thereby reduced, huge office buildings becoming nocturnal honeycombs of light, cities converted into spectacles transcending anything that poets ever imagined, and artificial light made the cheapest of manufactured commodities. Nor could he have foreseen that factories would become safer and that the productivity of the worker would be increased. That first bulb of his proves to have been a veritable Aladdin's lamp which the engineer has rubbed again and again to produce new and ever more extraordinary social effects. With Edison's carbon filament the electrical age became a reality.

Lawyer Leaves Freak Will.

For a score of years Will Latta was a prominent corporation lawyer in Indiana. His principal duty was to keep clients out of the courts, by adjustment of differences. That experience made him familiar with the simplicity of the law, but he did not use that simplicity when he wrote his will a few days prior to his death. He turned over $50,000 to a trust company, with instructions to hold it for 200 years, add the income to the principal, then make distribution in the year 2129. At that time he had figured the estate would amount to $16,000,000 and, in the provisions of the will, he sought to dispose of that sum in charitable and educational enterprises.

His will will fail of its purpose because no bank cares to undertake a task so prolonged and complicated. No one in the world of business even tries to look forward for two centuries and contribute plan and gifts. Doubtless efforts will be made to get aside the will, the estate may be eaten up in litigation, as was that left by Samuel J. Tilden, another brilliant lawyer. Benjamin Franklin tried to peer into the future for a century and plan his estate for distribution at that time. He wrote so many impossible provisions that the city of Boston now is trying to break the will. Peter Tellusson of England left a will in 1797, covering an estate of $3,000,000 to be held for three generations, permitted to accumulate, then to be distributed. Parliament in 1890 passed a law making it impossible to establish such trusts for individuals and the dream of Tellusson was impossible.

There must be much of human vanity in the heart of a man who seeks to have his dead hands control a fortune for a century after his death. The world changes, no one can estimate the changes, therefore no one can look sanely and practically at a distribution for public good at a date so far in the future. These freak wills are fine picking for those who handle the litigation in trying to break them and there is a way found in most instances to set them aside as impractical and impossible.

Chicago's Centennial Exposition

Chicago plans to do her full share toward placing her proposed centennial exposition of 1933 on a sound financial basis, before others are invited to take part. It is a fine illustration of civic courage, showing the ability and willingness of the principal to carry the burden and avoid a begging campaign addressed to others. It is an inspiring picture in the midst of so many ventures where those who hope to profit want to lean on others and have the public supply the cash. In fashioning that plan and placing the duty first on the home city, Chicago has done clear thinking that will not fail to awaken public interest in the proposed exhibition. In making that plan the city accepted the advice of a great architect who said Chicago should plan great things, as small affairs had no power to quicken the pulse of the nation.

Chicago will raise a fund of $10,000,000 to insure construction and equipment of the fair before it opens the door for national support or invites the co-operation of the states and foreign countries. Even in these days of big undertakings $10,000,000 is a tidy sum, quite large enough to indicate the stout hearts and courageous souls of that city. Chicago is a great city in population and wealth and $10,000,000 is proof of the determination developed in the hearts of the city promoters to do the task undertaken in a manner that will show the city at its best. Men of wealth and large corporations will subscribe to that sum, receiving bonds secured by the first 40 cents of each admission ticket. The greater security is in the ability of the city to plan an attraction that will bring millions of patrons and be solvent and successful throughout.

World fairs should be planned by men who are willing to give and big enough to rise above the hope of personal profit from the show planned. There have been some pitiful failures during the four decades since Chicago held its World's Fair. There is a fine opportunity for the big city to repeat its success and it appears to be making a fine start.

Learn to Work.

Possibly the best diagnosis of today's educational troubles can be deduced from a letter published in a Philadelphia newspaper the other day:

"I graduated from college only two years ago. These two years have been the toughest. I've ever bumped up against, because I have had to learn to work.

The youth who wastes too much of his college time on extra-curricular activities and goes out into the world without knowing how to work, did not know how to work when he entered college. And he did not know how to work when he was in high school, nor when he entered high school, nor when he was in grade school.

Why? Because he never learned to work in the one best place for the teaching of work, the home. In cities, at least, human ingenuity has so lightened home chores for both boys and girls, that too many of them no longer learn to work, nor achieve the sense of responsibility that goes with work. And until the urban American home devises some modern substitute for the home chores of yore, the grade school, the high school, the university and the graduate freshly thrust out into the world will continue to have their problems. The "project" executed in the kindergarten or the lower grades is all well enough. But is not a fully satisfactory substitute for the coal scuttle, sawbuck, garden rake and currycomb.

When you are waiting for the red light to go off and the green one to come on you get a pretty good idea of what the old philosopher meant when he said that a watched pot never boils.

There are already about as many unnecessary noises as we can stand and we're almost glad we don't expect to be here when the meek have inherited the earth and get to going well.

The senate has recessed until Aug 19 and the house until Sept. 20 and nothing more can possibly be done to the farmer for nearly three months.

TRANSATLANTIC TELEPHONE HAS WIDESPREAD USE

Ocean-spanning Service Utilized in Unique Ways for Business and Social Calls

Who uses the transatlantic telephone?

A New York evening newspaper recently asked the question impersonally, saying that reports of big deals in rubber, sugar, and flour are often the outcome of telephone calls from the United States to Europe, or that an American financier in Paris has employed the telephone to keep in touch with his stockholders in New York; that a Wall Street speculator in foreign exchange has been able, by conversation with London or Berlin, to reap a handsome profit.

The newspaper story stated that such instances tell only half the story, for actually a large proportion of the transatlantic telephone calls are social in nature. For example, an American sportsman telephoned to a London friend, asking him to arrange a fortnight of grouse-hunting in the Scottish Highlands. Tourists growing lonely in continental hotels, telephone their family an ocean away. Not so long ago, the wife of an American shopkeeper, associated with her husband in business, went abroad for the first time. Her husband asked her to call on some business associates while in France, and to facilitate this, wrote down their names and addresses in a notebook. Subsequently, he received a message that the notes were lost, but nothing daunted, he put in a telephone call from an eastern city to his wife in Paris and read the names to her in four minutes of telephone conversation. Another New Yorker, talking recently to a friend at the Savoy in London, distinctly heard "Big Ben" booming the hour.

The public is always interested when notables make use of the service, and there have been many such, including King Alfonso of Spain, King Albert of Belgium and people whose names are famous in the political, literary and business world. S. Parker Gilbert, Agent General of Reparations, used the transatlantic telephone from Washington to confer with his Paris representatives. William A. Brady, Jr., when he made his London debut recently as Director of the English premiere of "The Road to Rome," had among his listeners his father and mother in their New York home. Harry H. Prazee, Broadway theatrical producer, gravely ill in France, telephoned to New York for his doctor—probably the longest call ever made for a doctor. When Altes Helen Wills, American tennis star, announced her engagement, a London evening newspaper interviewed her via the transatlantic telephone service and was thus able to publish a confirmation of the engagement ahead of any other Sunday newspaper.

The transatlantic telephone service is often an agent of good cheer. A Florida newspaper recently told how the transatlantic telephone brought joy to a seventy-year-old father in Stockholm, Sweden, when he received a call from his daughter in Tampa. Father and daughter had not met for twenty years, but the thrill of their first conversation in that time reached its climax when his two granddaughters, aged twelve and fourteen years, said "Hello, Grandfather" over the thousands of miles of land and ocean.

Each season, Winona provides a high-class entertainment period. The operas to be given in this

Some outstanding attractions have been secured for this season. For instance, Thaviv's Exposition band and Halcyon Players, will spend six days, July 1 to 6, presenting band concerts and grand operas in condensed form. The opera, arias, duets, trios and quartets will be sung and acted by splendidly costumed artists. Beautiful stage settings will be provided with up to date lighting effects. The operas to be given in this condensed manner are: "Rigoletto," "Il Trovatore," "Bohemian Girl," "Cavalleria Rusticana" and "Robin Hood." The presentation of these wonderful musical events will certainly be of unusual interest to all music lovers.

Another big attraction arranged for this summer is "The Passion Play," spoken in English, produced by Clarence B. Cramer of Chicago, well known impresario of the middle west. A carefully selected cast will take the leading parts and many others will be added, making the total number of participants more than two hundred. A large chorus and orchestra will furnish appropriate music. A canvas of scenery will be used in properly staging this drama of drama, given not as an entertainment but for the purpose of visualizing to men and women, boys and girls, the real meaning of Christ to the world. There will be three productions, two at night and one matinee, July 12 and 13.

May Peterson, the popular soprano of the Metropolitan opera company will give a recital on August 15th during the musical festival week. Miss Peterson has appeared before American audiences for some time. She has attained her place and her right as an artist by hard work. She possesses a lovely voice which will long be remembered after being heard.

Other big attractions are being considered. Due announcements will be made later. The chautauqua program is made up of high class entertainments that vary each day: plays, concerts, lectures, motion pictures of first class quality will be seen and heard. Altogether Winona leads as a vacation resort in the many things she provides.

School nurse says all girls should know this

TALKING to a roomful of high school girls on personal hygiene, an experienced district nurse said: "One of the basic rules of health for girls is to keep the system functioning naturally at all times. Normal exercise and diet habits should be encouraged. But when necessary there's no harm in taking nujol, since it works mechanically and can't disturb the normal functions of any organ of the body. Particularly with girls, there are times when nujol should always be taken. Take a spoonful every night for a few days. It's a thoroughly safe and harmless method. It won't cause dizziness or gas pains or griping." Nujol is different from any other substance. It contains no drugs or medicine. It can be taken safely no matter how you are feeling because it's so pure and harmless, and works so easily. Every woman should keep a bottle on hand. Every druggist has remarkable substance. Get the real.

Mrs. W. H. Mittan Tells of the Times Ere Railroads Came

Memories of the days when Buchanan was but a cluster of log huts known as McCoy's creek, surrounded by a wilderness of forest traversed only by winding forest trails were recalled last week by Mrs. Sophia Mittan, oldest living resident of Buchanan. When Mrs. Mittan was born on July 4, 1843, there was a settlement of a few log houses clustering around the intersection of the streets now known as Front and Main, but which were then unnamed. A grist mill and whiskey still stood about where Glenn E. Smith's store now stands, and immediately south of it along the mill race stood a sawmill run by McCoy, the first settler of the village. Doc Morris, the father of John Morris, had opened a hotel in a frame building, part of which still stands as the Cottage Hotel. At the corner of Main and Dewey, where the Rough Wagon Works later stood, Alfred Williams and John Miller conducted a wagon works in a frame building. William Street and John and William Baker conducted a blacksmith shop in an adjoining building. William Baker was the father of Charles Baker, now a resident of the Bend of the River. The school was at that time held in a frame building which stood on the site now occupied by the home of Mrs. Nam G. Kent on Main Street. The Presbyterians were the first to hold religious services in the village, securing the use of the school house on Sundays. Later they built a church building and the Methodists were allowed to use it. The Williams home stood at the corner where River Street joins Portage. Both those streets were in use then, Portage being known as the Portage Prairie road to South Bend, and River Street being known as the road to the ferry which was located near where the bridge is now. There were seven houses along the river road between the Williams home and the ferry. The river was the main avenue of freight transportation, that being before the construction of the Michigan Central. Two warehouses stood on the river bank, near the location of the present power dam. Buchanan was surrounded by heavy timber, except for about 40 acres between Main street and Portage, and north of the present line of Third street, which had been cleared for a farm. On the north side of the Niles road, where the Clark plant and Bainton farm are now located, stood thick timber. Liberty Heights was covered with scrub oak.

Ms. Mittan is among the few living who witnessed the first train over the Michigan Central. The entire population turned out to witness the passenger train which was the first over the road. Wild turkeys and deer were plentiful in the district, the latter being killed in the vicinity as late as 1860. Alligators' Growth Alligators grow very slowly, and it is estimated that at fifteen years of age they are only two feet long; therefore a twelve-footer may be reasonably supposed to be seventy-five years of age. The rate of growth varies with animals in their wild state and those kept in captivity, and it is also governed by the amount as well as the type of food given. Distribution of Indians The following states, in the order listed, have the largest Indian populations: Oklahoma, Arizona, New Mexico, California, South Dakota, North Carolina, Montana, Wisconsin, Washington, Minnesota, North Dakota, Michigan and New York.

Kansas Would Take Steps to Preserve Small Farm Home

Manhattan, Kan.—Visions of a remobilized army of migratory farm workers such as annually swept over the wheat states, sometimes 150,000 strong, before the "combine" came into use, dejected agricultural economists and sociologists from accepting so-called corporation farming as a panacea for the middle west's farm problem.

Rather, authorities here voice the conviction that larger farms, efficiently run by competent individual owners and their families will dominate the next cycle of American agriculture.

Reports that acres farmed under corporation management in Kansas, Iowa, and elsewhere are turning up satisfying dividends, as this economic experiment gets a foothold in the wheat belt, have raised the question, What about the welfare of the hired man who gets only 90 days' work in a season under corporation farming? Students of the subject at the Kansas State Agricultural college, in the heart of the winter wheat empire, foresee a serious labor and social problem should recent predictions be fulfilled that this type of farming may ultimately predominate in this region.

Before the advent of the combined harvester-thresher, hardly a decade ago, the seasonal demands for labor in the wheat belt approximated that anticipated from a general adoption of corporation methods, declared R. M. Green, professor of agricultural economics.

An army of migratory labor descended upon the southern extremity of the wheat belt at the start of the harvest in May and followed the ripening grain thru the Dakotas and Canada in late summer. It was virtually a 90-day labor invasion attended by social and economic conditions which few people here desire to see repeated. A movement toward large, independently owned and operated farms is noted and favored by Dr. W. E. Grimes, head of the department of agricultural economics.

"The home advantages of the farm," he said, "the wholesome employment for farm boys and girls and the vast proportion of the family living that comes from the farm present advantages to the individually owned and operated farm of which the corporation farm cannot easily, and readily avail itself. These factors, it seems, are effectively preventing the displacement of the family farms by corporation farms."

Where corporation farms have been formed, in many cases it was as an extreme means of relieving distressed conditions due to farm failures and foreclosures during the depression period following the World War, Dr. Grimes points out. He doubts that chain farms will ever become of any great importance in the aggregate.

"On the other hand," he says, "the movement toward large scale farming by individual farmers on individually owned and operated farms is just getting under way. It is not a movement toward more men per farm, but a movement toward more farm per man. Increased use of power in farming is one of the chief causes of it. It is an expansion in the size of the family farm." Favorable consequences from this movement are seen by Dr. Grimes. It means fewer farms, he points out, and fewer farm people. Those who remain are more prosperous and are potentially better customers of stores, banks and other urban institutions.

The Old Timer's Corner

Old Timer Gives His Impressions of Home-coming

Well, the "Picnic-Homecoming" was another success. Wonderful weather, as if it were made to order, we ate out of doors and ate so much we could hardly walk afterwards. Such is life. We saw a lot of old friends, many of them there this year that we had not seen for many years. Some of our "old reliables" that we always depended upon to be with us, were not able to come, but we will hope for better luck next year.

I think there were about 30 or more from Chicago. Not as large a crowd as we had expected, but it seemed that so many of us were just tied up in some way so we couldn't make it.

I must say that the committee in charge of things did fine work. Everything went off as per schedule, and I will say that I enjoyed it very much. I would perhaps have liked it better if I hadn't been on the program, but that didn't bother me, at that. I just felt as though I was with old friends and if some of them did not like it, I am sorry, that's all. I have no apologies to offer. We are just what we are, and we can not change ourselves to suit every one. I was reminded by one old timer, that she "noticed that I was on the program, as usual." I didn't like the tone she said it in, but I hope it did not spoil her day, at that. You know that some of us as we grow old get selfish or crabby and hate to see any one else do anything that "gets over" and so I feel sorry for such people and don't let their little slams sink in "under the skin" at all. Just consider the source and let it go at that.

There is one thing that I want to say, about the poem that our friend Mr. Hawes, read for us. It was good, and it was funny, but I wish he had every one else who writes about Chicago, would forget about that idea that we are all getting shot to pieces over here. Fact is, we don't even know about those things. When it comes right down to brass tacks, Detroit has a far greater percentage of "killings" etc., than we do. So think that over, when you start to "razz" us. We are just "city broke" and don't shy at the head lines when they tell about some killing or other. So long as they keep on killing the "gangs", we should worry. They don't very often start on regular law abiding people. When Buchanan gets to be as large as Chicago, not a doubt but that she will have her quota of killings also, so tell the people of our parks and our boulevards and wonderful buildings and such things and leave out the unpleasant things. I reminds me of some "old woman" who gossips with her neighbor over the back fence and says a lot of things nice about her other neighbor and then winds it up by saying "BUT" and then she starts in and tells all about some dirty scandal or other and leaves a nasty taste in her mouth to spoil the whole thing. That's what I call unkind, and so when we want to talk about Chicago, say something nice or don't say anything. That's what I try to do about good old Buchanan. I love every bit of her, but I know things about her that I don't tell about and what's the use of starting things, anyway?

So, while I know that Mr. Hawes' poem was meant in a jocular spirit, yet it seems to me that it is taken seriously, by some, and that they get the prevailing idea that we are all dangerous, over here, and think it a good place to stay away from. Not so, dear friends, a good place to come to. No one gets molested unless they "mess around" in company that isn't so good. It is the same as any other big town, it has more people and a certain percentage of them are bad, so the more people the more bad ones you find. But I find there is good things in everyone, no matter how bad they are, and I would rather tell of something good than of the bad. It don't cost anything to treat people nice instead of saying the things that will hurt them.

Sunday morning I drove out to the woods and we picked some wild raspberries. Got all scratched up with briars and full of burs but it was great fun. Later on we went down and walked thru the "Warren Woods." That is a wonderful thing for the Warren people to do. I think it is a step in the right direction. Those big tall trees are like monuments. Some day I want to write a lot about them and so now will just mention them in passing.

We ran into a good old-fashioned rain and wind storm, on our way into Chicago. It blew down a big tree that fell right across the highway just this side of LaPorte, and we had to detour over soft roads and in the rain. (Not so good.) But we arrived home all safe and sound and rather enjoyed the little tiff with the storm. I like storms, myself. Just sort of brings you closer to the "real" that we can't control, you realize that we are and ordinary.

Statute Requires Justices of Peace To Submit Reports

The state statute requires all justices of the peace to submit reports of county cases tried before them, to the prosecuting attorney.

The statute also requires the prosecuting attorney to file a report of all such cases with the Attorney General's office, immediately after June 30th.

It is necessary for all justices to report before the prosecuting attorney can make his report, so each and every justice who has had any county cases, should prepare and report immediately on the proper blank forms. Reports should be mailed to W. M. Cunningham at Benton Harbor, Mich.
