Herbert Roe is Cleared of Embezzlement

Charges of embezzlement against Herbert Roe, former cashier of the Buchanan State bank, were dismissed as unfounded by Judge Victor D. Sprague, Cheboygan, who filed his opinion in the Berrien county circuit court Saturday. Judge Sprague granted the motion of Defense Attorney I. W. Riford to dismiss Roe on the grounds that the prosecution failed to prove by competent witnesses that embezzlement took place. The charges against Roe had been in court since early in 1933. The bank closed October 16, 1931.

Galien Factory Makes 1,000 Dozen Rakes First Year

O. A. VanPelt, Galien manufacturer, was a visitor in the Record office yesterday and stated that in his first year of production he had disposed of 1,000 dozen rakes. He has flattering prospects of business from leading hardware jobbers of the country which should increase the output of his product, known to the trade as Van's Leaf and Lawn Rake. Which proves that it is possible to go ahead in spite of depressions if you can think up a good idea.

Federal Tax Bank Checks Discontinued

Considerable savings will be possible to Buchanan people as the result of the expiration on Dec. 31 of the federal statute providing for a 2 cent tax on all bank checks which had been in effect for three years. 'Swowing 'Em In' Here is an old time precedent which might well be considered by incoming governments of these days:

Awake back in territorial days there was a township organized in Michigan and it was the first experience these particular pioneers had ever had with government. They elected the officers required under the constitution of 1837, but they didn't know very much about the business and, unlike the officers of the present day, they admitted it.

Special Election to Choose Successors 4 Victims Hotel Kerns Disaster; May Change Complexion.

The new Republican state regime headed by Governor Frank D. Fitzgerald, took over affairs of state at Lansing Tuesday in a gala program which began with the formal induction into office in the chamber of the House of Representatives and concluded with a dinner and ball in the evening.

Chief Justice William W. Potter of the State Supreme Court administered the oaths to the incoming officers as follows: governor, Frank D. Fitzgerald, republican, succeeding William A. Comstock, Democrat; Harry S. Toy, Republican, attorney general, succeeding Patrick H. O'Brien, Democrat; Orville E. Atwood, republican, secretary of state, succeeding Clark W. Brown, republican, and acting secretary of state since the resignation of Fitzgerald.

The other state elective officers, consisting of auditor general and treasurer, are held by democratic incumbents who succeed themselves.

The state administrative board will still be in control of the Democrats 4 to 3, instead of 6 to 1 as formerly.

The legislature convened yesterday, with the Republicans in control of the senate and the Democrats still in control of the house by the narrow margin of 49 to 47. This may be altered later as the result of special elections which will be called by Governor Fitzgerald to fill vacancies left by the deaths of four representatives in the Hotel Kerns disaster.

The new regime finds the Republicans in charge of a majority of the executive posts, with full control of the many state appointive offices to be filled by the governor and the secretary of state, and with the Democrats retaining control of the administrative board and the lower house of the legislature for the time being at least.

Among the recommendations to be made to the legislature by Fitzgerald is that the administrative board be abolished. He contends it has become nothing more than a forum for political propaganda. If it fails it will mark the crumbling of the keystone around which former Governor Alex. J. Groesbeck built his plan of centralized government 14 years ago. The legislature of 1921 created the administrative board, and with it set up the central accounting and purchasing systems and a separate parole commissioner.

Taxation will occupy an important place on the docket of the next legislature. The state tax structure was changed by the last legislature, when the sales tax was enacted to replace most of the state property tax. Delinquent state taxes up to and including those from 1932 have been placed in a 10-year amortization plan.

Fitzgerald plans to recommend that unpaid taxes be cancelled by the payment of current taxes. That is, if 1935 taxes are paid the delinquency for one past year would be wiped out, if 1936 taxes are paid another year's delinquency would be erased, and so on. He believes this would encourage payment of current levies. He also will recommend exemptions from the sales tax for articles used in agricultural and industrial production and for foods and necessities, if there is no constitutional bar. It is anticipated bills will be offered to include 1933 and 1934 taxes in the amortization plan.

The expiration date for the state mortgage moratorium law under which property owners could ask the court to stave off foreclosure proceedings—is 1935, and the legislature may consider an extension.

The incoming governor may advocate changes in the welfare system whereby direction would be assumed by the state welfare department rather than a state emergency commission, which works under orders from Democratic high-ups in Washington. The state has been contributing $12,000,000 a year toward relief.

Fitzgerald has announced he will appoint G. C. Dillman, former state highway commissioner, as

RECORD HAS BIRTHDAY THIS WEEK; REAL BEGINNING OF PAPER WAS BY A. BENNETT BEFORE CIVIL WAR

The first newspaper in town, from which the Record is said to trace direct descent, was the Buchanan Vindicator. It was published by Alonzo Bennett who published the first issue in January 1859. Mr. Bennett was a Democrat in the days when Democrats were even more marked men in Buchanan than now. You know Buchanan has never voted anything but the Republican ticket since the party was started under the Oaks in Jackson in 1854. This town gave John C. Fremont a majority—and it gave Herbert Hoover a majority. That's loyalty for you.

But Mr. Bennett, it seems, was guarded in his political expression, so much so that Darius Cook who was running the Niles paper, took him to task for being on the Republican side. Cook didn't understand all the perils of being a Democrat in Buchanan. Anyway Bennett (Continued on page 3)

George Must Have Very Mean Streak

Mrs. E. I. Bird received a clipping recently from her son, George Bird, with the news of a record temperature of 98 degrees in the sun and 87 in the shade on Saturday, Dec. 29, which was a record for December in that part of Texas. "Show this to some of the Buchanan snow shovelers and see if they believe it," wrote George.

Well, folks, this week the Record has another birthday—its 67th birthday, and like Grandfather Squere who said, as he rounded his three-score and ten "I've the trick of it now and can do it again"—well that's just the way we feel, we can do it again.

But several have been asking us about this and that in the Record's past, so we take this occasion for inditing a brief biography. For the life of the Record is an open book—and what a book!

The Record is supposed to be 67 years old this week, but as a matter of fact it is older than it admits, or should we say it enjoyed a previous existence.

State, County Governments Are Sworn In

(Continued from page 1) welfare director. He evidently plans to attempt to transfer to Dillman much of the authority now vested in the quasi-federal body. How far such a program will get remains to be seen. Democrats insist the response from Washington will be prompt and decisively negative. The whole question of liquor control is expected to be mullied over again. Fitzgerald favors fewer "rate liquor stores and more designated merchants. Some legislators feel the state monopoly should be abolished entirely. Others want stringent laws to prohibit dancing or entertainment in liquor places. There is some talk among Republicans of changing the make-up of the control commission. Abolition of the $2 a year head tax—which comparatively few residents of the state have paid—with continuation of the old age pension by financing it from other revenues; consolidation of inspection forces; elimination of non-essential divisions of government; transfer of many duties of the agricultural department to Michigan state college; a staggered commission to name the state highway commissioner and administer highway law; abolition of the central accounting division; school appropriations in answer to the demands of educational groups for additional state aid at the rate of $25,000,000 a year; a merger of the state public utilities commission, securities commission and public trust commission; a parole and pardon board to supplant the pardon and parole commissioner, and possible

R. J. WENTLAND RETIRES FROM R. R. SERVICE

Travels 250,000 Miles in Service of Government in 30 Years Since 1904.

Richard J. Wentland, Carrier No. 1, out of Galien, is retiring from the rural route, January 1st, after thirty years of service for the government. During this time he has traveled about 250,000 miles and handled 1,600,000 pieces of mail; worn out seven horses and seven cars and had fourteen years of traveling with a horse and buggy and sixteen years with motor car. After graduating from the Galien high school in 1899 and receiving a teacher's certificate before graduation, he taught school for the next three years after which he attended Valparaiso University, taking a business course. In autumn of 1904, he took the examination which was held in St. Joseph for Rural Route No. 3, out of Galien, a newly made route. As a result of this examination, he received a standing of 99%, and received the appointment from among about 20 contestants. At that time there were only two routes out of Galien, the carriers being Arthur Metzgar and Edward Shearer. In the autumn of 1906 at the resignation of Mr. Metzgar, Mr. Wentland was transferred from Route 3 to Route 1, with Mr. Shearer taking over Route 2. Rural Route mail service was started in Galien in 1901 with John Batten and Dale Swem as carriers. Mr. Wentland has missed only about 15 days for sickness in all of his 30 years service and leaves the service with the highest commendation of his patrons.

In the year 1850 the state surveyed a mail road from Niles to New Buffalo, which followed the route of the present Niles-Buchanan road, passed thru this place on Front street, and was to be opened directly west. But the owner of the farm at the end of the present West Front street made objection to moving his barn, and the plan was discontinued, no doubt mainly because the railway had gone thru and there was little need for it.

So they 'swowed' in the officers and they couldn't see a government which was honest if not entirely enlightened.

THE NEW FORD V-8 FOR 1935

The New Ford V-8 for 1935 is the biggest and roomiest Ford car ever built. It is a strikingly handsome car, with modern lines and new, luxurious appointments. But most important of all it is especially designed to give you smooth, easy riding over all kinds of roads—"a front-seat ride for back-seat riders." This ease of riding is achieved by the use of three basic principles never before combined in a low-price car. 1. Correct distribution of car weight by moving engine and body forward eight and a half inches. 2. New location of seats by which the rear seat is moved forward, toward the center of the car—away from the rear axle and away from the bumps. 3. New spring suspension which permits the use of longer, more flexible springs and increases the springbase to 123 inches. The result is Center-Poise—which not only gives you a new riding comfort but adds to the stability of the car and its ease of handling. You can take curves with greater safety. There are many new features in the Ford V-8 for 1935 which make the car still easier to drive. New brakes give more power for stopping quickly with far less foot pressure on the pedal. A new type of easy-pressure clutch employs centrifugal force to increase efficiency at higher speeds. New steering mechanism makes the car still easier to handle. New, wider, roomier seats. The New Ford V-8 for 1935 retains the V-8 engine which has demonstrated its dependability and economy in the service of more than a million owners. There are refinements, but no change in basic design. You buy premium performance when you buy this Ford V-8—full 85 horsepower and capable of 80 miles an hour. All Ford V-8 cars for 1935 come equipped with Safety Glass throughout at no additional cost. We invite you to see this New Ford V-8 for 1935 at the showrooms of Ford dealers. You will want to ride in it—to drive it yourself. You will find it a new experience in motoring.

that the safest, quickest and most direct way to Chicago is via

Put that down in your 1935 resolutions... and you'll find at the end of the year that you will have saved money by so doing. It's cheaper to ride the South Shore Line than to drive your auto... it's quicker because there are no traffic snarls to untangle... it's more direct because the steel rails are laid straight as an arrow direct into Chicago's Loop. And it's always warm and comfortable in the winter. Get the South Shore Line habit and save time and money.

der the oaks in Carlisle's yard. It is a matter of interest that it was under these same oaks that the young folks of Buchanan held their farewell picnics for the departing soldiers in the early years of the Civil War and that many a departing soldier bade his sweetheart a fond, and in some cases an eternal farewell there. Our authority for the latter is a letter by Esther Montague Winch published in the Record several years ago.

Record Has Birthday This Week

nett put out the Vindicator for a couple of years, publishing in the frame building on the corner of Oak and Front street where the late John Dick, was working for Bennett as a compositor, and went with him when he packed up his type and took his press under his arm and left for southern Illinois. There sentiment was more divided even in Civil war days, and Bennett started to pop off a little. So much so that he became a marked man. Dick was tipped off and left his employ, joining the union army. Shortly afterward there was a column of northern soldiers marching through on their way to the southern front, and as they were opposite Bennett's shop, they suddenly broke rank and ran into his shop, smashing furniture and equipment and wrecking the place. They pitched the type case through the window and in general the place was a mess. As a result Bennett did not publish any more there. Well, Mr. Bennett was quite a man in his day, he ran a lot of the first surveys in Berrien county, he served as a county officer with satisfaction. But the days of the Civil war were hot days—their thunders have died away in the distance of time and we don't understand it now.

Bennett sold the business and goodwill to Lloyd and Turner, who played safe by changing the name to the "Buchanan Union." The only copy of that paper we know anything about is in the possession of Mrs. Carl Remington. John Holmes was writing it; that Lloyd and Turner sold out in 1867 to D. A. Wagner, but if so we don't understand how the volume numbers date back to January, 1868. We have in the office a file dating back to July 22, 1869, the first number being Vol. III, No. 22, which would indicate the Record as such started its existence in January 1865. Indicating that possibly some editor forgot to change the volume number. Or perhaps, like the boys and girls after they get about so old, it skipped a birthday or two.

Anyway in the opening number of our initial file, the then editor, D. A. Wagner, states the policy of the paper as follows:

"To the upright, honest citizens of Berrien county we look for the support of the Record, and not to those who would injure their neighbors for the sake of benefitting themselves, or to those who care not for the public good."

But in later years, of course, we have had to change that policy. Gosh! look what it would do to our subscription list. But then Wagner was an ex-professor in a theological seminary.

In 1870 Wagner sold a half interest to Atty. William D. Kingery, a brother of Henry Kingery and Kathryn Kingery. In 1874, Wagner sold his remaining half interest to Willard Marble, a brother of Mrs. Mary Matthews. Marble held the half interest only a few weeks, trading it as payment on the Lindley farm, Warren Township, St. Joseph county. In January, 1875, Lindley sold to J. G. Holmes, Atty. Kingery died in 1875, and in the settlement of the estate his share in the paper was bought by J. G. Holmes, who thus acquired entire ownership. Holmes was sole or part owner for 19 years, his tenure of ownership being longer than that of any other publisher.

Holmes was a colorful newspaper man, with a sharp and ready wit and plenty of spunk. According to his own story, published as his "swan song" on relinquishing ownership, he frequently got a "rise" out of the local inhabitants. John always was plain-spoken in his news policy and called a spade a spade, although occasionally a reader protested that he called it a steam shovel and demanded a retraction. But retractions were few and far between in Editor Holmes paper. He stated in his closing issue that during his 19 years in the neighborhood of 500 men had definitely announced their in-tion of beating the tar out of him, but that none of them had ever gotten as far as the newspaper office.

Of course the 500 is probably just an approximate sort of "off-hand should say" stuff.

During the regime of Mr. Holmes the Record staff wholeheartedly stood for progress. It campaigned and was largely responsible for the damming of the St. Joseph river and the installation of the first power plant. The slogan then was "Dam the river and boom the town." Of course the point of that story is lost on a generation that does not know what a river "boom" is, to say nothing of a dam.

When the dam was installed, the Record was the first industry in town to make use of the power for manufacturing. About the same time the Record was also the first business house in town to install a "washbasin" as Holmes then called it, with waterworks connections. Formerly all the business men walked back and forth from "Jacob's well" in front of George Black's house. Since that time, however, several other business houses have installed wash basins.

Holmes sold out to D. H. Bower in 1894, but is yet an occasional and most entertaining correspondent from his present home in Cedar Rapids, Ia.

And now, if you will excuse our informality, we will drop back a ways in this story. Back in early days when Wagner & Kingery were in charge the Record was located in the present quarters of the Portz Food Shop. Either just before or after that it was located on the second floor above the present quarters of Brodrick's drug store. (Correct us if we're wrong, John.) Holmes moved the paper to the room now occupied by the Sands Grocery & Market, where it remained for years. When Bower bought the paper he moved it in January, 1901, to the corner of Front and Oak in the present Legion building on the same site where it had been started 40 years before by Alonzo Bennett.

During the eighteen hundred's the Record had two competitors, "The Buchanan Independent" run by J. R. Hill and "The Buchanan Reporter" run by a Dr. Berriek, a homeopathic physician with reforming proclivities, who used the paper to promote the Greenback cause. 'Tis said that the business men used to advertise on the drop curtain of the old Rough Drop house and once John Holmes bought a space and had painted on it: "Do you read the Buchanan Record? If not, why not?"

Thus John left an opening for his rival editor that was big enough to throw a dog through and he made the most of it. "He—Mr. Hill—bought the space right below and had painted there: "Because the Independent is a better family newspaper." Well, that was once that John got scored on. (Correct us if we're wrong, John.) Hill's office was in the second story over the quarters now occupied by the Glenn Smith store. He later sold out to a man by the name of Sewall, who ran a small factory in connection with the paper, manufacturing clasp envelopes which he had patented. He had a force of from 20 to 30 girls working for him at a time, including a number of women still residing here. As is quite often the case, Mr. Sewall's divided interests did not prosper and both the paper and the factory eventually languished and "blinked" out. Some time in the eighties Holmes changed the name of the Record to the Buchanan Record, which it remained until it was bought by Bower, who changed it back to "The Berrien County Record."

D. H. Bower turned over the paper to a relative, D. F. Bower, who later was killed in an automobile wreck in Detroit. The Bowers sold the paper to Mack Chamberlain, who developed a large job department, spending most of his time in Chicago soliciting orders for the shop. Eventually that business did not prove profitable, as it was necessary to bid low to meet the competition of city shops, and the expenses of shipment ate up the profits.

Later Roscoe Burch, the publisher of the Galien Advocate, bought out Chamberlain, and combined the Advocate with it. Burch moved into the north part of the quarters now occupied by the Chevrolet Sales. Chamberlain retained his job department and moved it to Dowagiac.

In the fall of 1909 Thomas Torney bought out Burch, and also purchased the Buchanan Argus, which had been established in 1901 by Phay Graftort. Torney moved into the quarters of the Argus in the "Beehive," where the American Express company office and Postal Telegraph are now located. Graftort, who had operated the Argus during its eight years of life, retained the job department after Torney bought the paper.

In the fall of 1910 Torney bought the building now occupied by the Sands market and moved the paper there, which was the second occupancy of that building.

In 1916 Torney sold out to Glenn Easton. After twelve years of ownership, Easton sold out to H. L. Hayden. In the meantime Easton had gone in partnership twice, once with Mr. Hunter and once with Cass Cullis, both of whom disposed of their interests. In 1926 he sold the paper to Wood & Wray, who operated it a year and a half and then turned it back to Easton. Which brings the tale down to the comparatively modern date. In 1930 H. L. Hayden sold to the Record Printing Company in whom title now resides.

Names 2 Veterans Not Contained In Early G. A. R. Roster

Albert Nutt states that the list of members of the G. A. R. Post published in the Record last week did not contain the names of two veterans of his acquaintance, Ashley Carlisle and Liberty Drago. It is possible that these veterans were not members of the post at the time of organization. Ashley Carlisle was very active in the affairs of the organization later, and for many years the William Perrott post held its annual picnic un-

THE NARRATIVE

CHAPTER I.—David Ransdell, approaching New York on the liner Europa, receives a succession of radiograms offering him $1,000,000, finally $20,000, for an exclusive newspaper interview divulging the mission that brings him from South Africa. Ransdell, noted aviator, has been secretly commissioned as captain by Lord Rhinoceros and Professor Bronson, the astronomer, to fly across the Mediterranean to the fast liner, with a large traveling case containing photographic plates. His instructions are to deliver them to Dr. Cole Henderson, in New York. Tony Drake calls at the Hendersons' apartment. Ransdell arrives and Eve Henderson, with whom Tony is deeply in love, introduces Tony to Ransdell.

CHAPTER II.—New York newspaper publisher's statement made by Henderson and concurred in by sixty of the world's greatest scientists. The prepared statement says that Professor Bronson has discovered two planets, which must have broken away from another or sun and traveled through interstellar space for an incalculable time, until they came to a region of the heavens which brought them at last under the attraction of the sun. The statement says that the planets' course, consequently, has been modified by the sun, and as a result they are now on a collision course with the earth. The result of the inevitable collision must be the end of the earth. Approaching the earth, referred to as Bronson Alpha and Bronson Beta, the latter being the smaller, about the size of the earth and revolving about Bronson Alpha as the moon does about the earth.

CHAPTER III.—"It's going to be doomsday, isn't it?" Tony Drake asks Eve. No, Tony—more than doomsday. Days after doomsday, she tells him. She explains that the first time the Bronson Bodies approach the earth, they will hit it, but the second time, one, Bronson Beta, will pass, and the other will hit it. Henderson plans to build, with the idea of landing on Bronson Beta, and the scientist advises him to gain the maximum of scientific culture and proficiency in manual arts and elementary mechanics. Tony rounds up a suitable man and women to build the ship at a cantonment. Henderson established in northern Africa, and the scientist's first approach, Tony returns to New York to report to Henderson the existing conditions throughout the country.

CHAPTER IV.—Henderson has not been able to find a metal or an alloy which will withstand the heat and pressure of atomic energy to be used in propelling the Space Ship. The scientists change their minds and his immediate party are to fly to Michigan the latest rush through the State of New York.

CHAPTER V.—Henderson has not been able to find a metal or an alloy which will withstand the heat and pressure of atomic energy to be used in propelling the Space Ship. The scientists change their minds and his immediate party are to fly to Michigan the latest rush through the State of New York.

CHAPTER VI.—The tides sweep back to the Appalachians on the east and to the mountains on the Pacific side, and the change of the entire surface of the earth. The Washington government moves as many millions as possible to the great Mississippi valley. The Henderson settlement survives unscathed, and the scientists' disturbances having started the day Henderson and his party leave New York for the cantonment.

CHAPTER VII.—Bronson Alpha collides with the moon and wipes it out. Ransdell and Elliot James, an English poet, and Henderson are invited to join the colony. Leave on an aerial reconnaissance, as the Henderson colony is to be there in conditions elsewhere. They return safe, reporting almost universal destruction and utter helplessness throughout the country.

CHAPTER VIII.—Three weeks later, Ransdell, with Peter Vanderbilt, prominent New Yorker, selected by Henderson as the leader of the party on the Space Ship, and James, fly over a land of desolation. They are attacked by a crazed mob and each member of the party is killed. But they return alive, and Ransdell has found and brought back a sample of metal which the scientists have been unable to discover, and which is indispensable to the construction of the Space Ship.

The three explorers had agreed on September 14 as the first possible day for their return; but so great was the longing to learn the state of the outside world that on the twelfth even those who felt no particular concern for the men who ventured in the airplane began to watch the sky.

No one went to bed that night until long after the usual hour. Tony was in charge of the landing arrangements. At three a. m. he was sitting on the edge of the field with Eve. They sat with straining eyes and ears. Doctor Dodson lay on a cot, ready in case the landing should result in accident.

At four, nothing had changed. It began to grow light. Eve stood up stiffly and stretched. "Maybe I'd better leave. I have some work laid out for morning."

"But she had not walked more than ten steps when she halted. "I thought I heard motors," she said. Tony nodded, unwilling to break the stillness. A dog barked in the camp. The first sun rays tipped the lowest clouds with gold. Then the sound came unmistakably. For a full minute they heard the rise and fall of a churning motor—remote, soft, yet unmistakable. "It's coming!" Eve said. She rushed to Tony and held his shoulder. Their eyes swept the heavens. Then they saw it simultaneously—a speck in the dawn atmosphere. The ship was near. Those who beheld it now appreciated not only the irregularity of its course, but the fact that it was flying slowly.

"They've only got two motors," someone said. The plane made a dizzy line toward them. It flew like a duck mortally wounded. There was no sign of the men in the cabin. The pilot did not wiggle his wings or circle. In a shuddering slip he dropped toward the ground. "She's going to crash!" some one yelled. Tony, Dodson and Jack Taylor were already in a light truck. Fire apparatus and stretchers were in the space behind them. The truck's engine roared. The plane touched the ground heavily, bounced, touched again, ran forward and slowed. It nosed over. The propeller on the forward engine beat. The plane touched the ground heavily, bounced, touched again, ran forward and slowed. It nosed over. The propeller on the forward engine beat.

Tony threw in the clutch of the car and shot to it. With the doctor and Jack at his heels, he flung open the cabin door and looked into the canted chamber. Two men lay on the floor at the forward end—Vanderbilt and James. Ransdell was unconscious over the instrument panel. Vanderbilt looked up at Tony. His face was pale white; his shirt was blood-soaked. And yet there shined momentarily in the fading light in his eyes a spark of unquenchable, deathless, reckless and almost diabolical glee. His voice was quite distinct. He said: "In the words of the Immortal Lindbergh, 'Here we are.'" Then he fainted. James was unconscious.

The truck came back toward the three very slowly and carefully. In its bed Dodson looked up from his three charges. He announced briefly as way was made for them: "They've been through hell. They're shot, bruised, half-starved. But so far, I've found nothing surely fatal." An hour later, with every member of the community who could leave his post assembled, Henderson stepped to the rostrum in the dining hall. "All three will live," he said simply.

Cheering made it impossible for him to continue. He waited for silence. "James has a broken arm and concussion. Vanderbilt has been shot through the shoulder. Ransdell's feet are one of distinguished heroism." Again cheering broke tumultuously through the hall. Again Henderson stood quietly until it subsided. "This evening we will meet again. At that time I shall read to you from the diary which James kept during the past thirty days. I have skimmed some of its pages. It is a remarkable document. I must prepare you by saying, my friends, that those of our fellow human beings who have not perished have reverted to savagery, almost without notable exception."

When Henderson stepped from the platform, he went over to his daughter. He seemed excited. "Eve," he said, "I want you and Drake to come to the office right away." Bronson and Dodson were already there when they arrived. A dozen other men joined them; and last to appear was Henderson himself. It was easy to perceive his excitement now. He commenced to speak immediately. "My friends, the world I have to add to my announcement in the hall is of stupendous importance! "When we took off Ransdell's clothes, we found belted to his body, and heavily wrapped, a note, a map, and a chunk of metal. You will remember, doubtless, that Ransdell was once a miner and a prospector. His main interest had always been diamonds. And his knowledge of geology and metallurgy is self-taught and of the practical sort." Bronson, unable to control himself, burst forth into speech. "Good God—Henderson! He found it!"

The scientist continued impassively: "The eruptions caused by the passage of the Bodies were of so intense a nature that they brought to earth not only modern rock, but vast quantities of the interplanetary substance of the earth—which, as you know, is presumably of metal, as the earth's total density is slightly greater than that of iron. Ransdell noticed on the edge of such a flow a quantity of solid unmelted material. Realizing that the heat surrounding it had been enormous,

"My friends"—Henderson's voice began to tremble—"for the past seventy-five minutes this metal has withstood not only the heat of an atomic blast, but the immeasurably greater heat of Professor Kane's recently developed atomic furnace. We are at the end of the quest." Suddenly, to the astonishment of his hearers, Henderson bowed his head in his arms and cried like a woman.

Henderson stood before an audience of nearly a thousand persons. It was a feverish audience. He bowed to the applause. "I speak to you tonight, my friends, in the first full flush of the knowledge that your sacrifices and sufferings have not been in vain. Ransdell has solved our last technical problem. We have assured ourselves by observation that life on the planet-to-be will be possible; man shall live; we are the forefathers of his new history." The wild applause proclaimed the hopes no one had dared to declare before.

"But tonight I do not wish to talk of the future. There is time enough for that. I wish to talk—or rather to read—of the present." He picked up from a small table the topmost of a number of ordinary note books. "I have here James' record of the journey that brought us salvation. I cannot read you all of it. This is the first of the seven notebooks James filed." He opened the book. He read: "August 16. Tonight Ransdell, Vanderbilt and I descended at six o'clock precisely on a small body of water which is a residue in a bed of Lake Michigan. We are lying at anchor about a mile from Chicago. "Following south along what was once the coast of Lake Michigan we flew over scenes of desolation and destruction identical with those described after our first reconnaissance. The world has indeed been wrecked. "We had landed on the water from the north. We anchored near shore and quickly made our way to land. All of us were armed. Lots were drawn to determine whether Ransdell or Vanderbilt would remain on guard beside the ship. I was useless in that capacity, as I would be unable to fly it in case of emergency. It was agreed that the lone guard was to take off instantly upon the approach of any persons whatever. Our ship was our only refuge. "Vanderbilt was elected to remain. Ransdell and I started off at once toward the city. As we scrambled to the top of a sea-wall, the streets of the metropolis stretched before us—empty. Chicago was a dead city. We strained our ears and eyes. There was nothing. No light in the staring windows. No plume of steam on the lofty buildings. Unconsciously, we had both drawn our revolvers. "Directly ahead of us were the skyscrapers of the northern business district. Large sections of brick and stonework had been shaken from the sides of the buildings, leaving yawning holes which looked as if caused by shell-fire. The great windows had been shken into the street, and the sidewalks were literally buried in broken glass. "We moved forward into the business district. We had crossed the railroad tracks before we found any bodies; but on the other side they appeared here and there. It was immediately manifest that the people who had left Chicago had taken with them every object upon which they could lay their hands. The stores were like open bazaars; their glass windows had been broken in by marauders or burst out by the quakes, and their contents had been ravaged. "We continued to notice that the dead on the street did not represent even a tithing of the metropolitan population, and I expressed the opinion that the passing of the Bronson Bodies must have caused a mighty exodus. "Ransdell's reply was a shrug, and abruptly my mind was discharged upon a new course. "You think they're all upstairs?" I asked. "He nodded. A block farther along we came to an open fissure. As we approached it, the wind blew us a wisp of this cooling gas, and instantly we were thrown into fits of coughing. Our lungs burned, our eyes stung and we snatched each other's arms and ran uncertainly from the place. "Gas," Ransdell said, gasping. "No other words were necessary to interpret the frightful fate of Chicago; nothing could better demonstrate how profound was the disturbance under the earth's crust. For in this region noted for its freedom from seismic shocks and remote from the recognized volcanic region, it was evident that deadly, suffocating gases such as previously had found the surface only through volcanoes, here had seeped up and blotted out the population. These gases, largely hydrochloric, were heavier than air; and apparently they lay like a choking cloud on the ground. When those who escaped the first suffocating currents—and apparently they were in the majority—climbed to upper floors to escape, they were followed by the rising vapors. That frightful theory explained why there were so few dead on the street, and why no one had returned to the silent city. "Darkness was approaching, and moreover our single experience with the potency of the gas even in dilution warned us that a deeper penetration of the metropolitan area was more than dangerous. "We found Vanderbilt sitting upon a stone on the shore beside the plane. We pushed out to it in the collapsible boat, and while we ate supper, we told him what we had seen. "His comment perhaps is suitable for closing this record of the great city of Chicago: "Sitting alone, I realized what you were investigating; and for the first time, gentlemen, I understand what the end of the world would mean. I have never come so close to losing my nerve. It was awful."

Henderson turned a few pages. "I am now skipping a portion of Mr. James' record. It covers their investigation of the Great Lakes and describes with care the geological uplifting of that basin. From Chicago they flew to Detroit. In Detroit they found a different form of desolation. The waters of Lake Huron had poured through the city and the surrounding district, completely depopulating it and largely destroying it. They were able to land their plane on a large boulevard, a section of which was unbroken, and they refueled in the vicinity. They saw no one. Cleveland had suffered a similar fate. Then they continued their flight to Pittsburgh. I read from Mr. James' record:

"Like God leading the children of Israel, Pittsburgh remains in my memory as a pillar of cloud by day and of fire by night. As we approached the city, we saw smoke arising against the sky. Vanderbilt damped the motors and we dropped toward the Monongahela river, which was full to the brim of the levees and threatened to inundate the city. Earthquakes had half wrecked its structures. Smoke and steam emerged from a rent in Mount Washington. The bridges were all down. "Our ship came to rest, and we taxied cautiously toward one of the submerged bridges. I threw a rope over one of the girders, and we made fast. We went ashore by way of the taut rope. "It was easy to perceive the cause of the smoke. A large area of what remained of Pittsburgh was in flames, and to our ears came clearly the din of battle. Rifles cracked incessantly; machine-guns clattered; and occasionally we heard the cough of a hand grenade. "It was not wise to proceed farther. Nevertheless, I insisted on going forward while my companions returned to guard our precious ship. I had not invaded the city before the street did not represent even a tithing of the metropolitan population, and I expressed the opinion that the passing of the Bronson Bodies must have caused a mighty exodus. "Ransdell's reply was a shrug, and abruptly my mind was discharged upon a new course. "You think they're all upstairs?" I asked. "He nodded. A block farther along we came to an open fissure. As we approached it, the wind blew us a wisp of this cooling gas, and instantly we were thrown into fits of coughing. deemed that the great steel city was in no danger from the tides, and had used it for manufacturing during the last days. "After the quake, what was left of the administrative powers immediately organized the remnant of the police and National Guard. Food ran low; medical supplies gave out; the populace rebelled. "Three days before our arrival a mob armed itself and attempted to take over the distribution of the remaining food and supplies. I had appeared on the scene apparently after the mob and the forces of law and order had been fighting for three days; and it was not necessary for Schultz to explain to me that in a very short time the National Guardsmen and police would be routed; their numbers were vastly inferior; their ammunition was being exhausted, and organized warfare was out of the question in that madman's terrain. "I abandoned Schultz to his comrades and made my way back to the river. We lost no time in taking off." "Mr. James' diary next describes a hazardous flight across the Appalachians and their arrival at Washington. "When I say that the ocean covered what had been the Capital of our nation, I mean it precisely. No spire, no pinnacle, no monument, no tower appeared above the blue water that rippled to the feet of the Appalachian chain. There was no trace of Chesapeake bay, no sign of the Potomac river, no memory of the great works of architecture which had existed at the Capital. It was gone, and over it was the sea, stretching to the utmost reaches of the eye. The eastern seaboard has dropped. We turned back after assuring ourselves that this condition obtained along the entire coast. "Mr. James," Henderson said, "now adds to our geographical knowledge by revealing that the whole Mississippi basin, as well as the east coast and Gulf states, had been submerged. Cincinnati is under water. The sea swells not only over Memphis but over St. Louis, where it becomes a wide estuary stretching in two great arms almost to Chicago and to Davenport. "They next investigated the refuge area in the Middle West. Here they found indescribable chaos. Again I refer to the diary. "Following the directions we had been given, we flew to Hutchinson, Kansas. For a number of years Hutchinson had been chosen as the temporary capital of the state's refuge area. It is normally fifteen hundred feet above sea level. It is in the center of a rich grain, farm, poultry, dairy, live stock and lumber region. It has large packing plants, grain elevators, creameries, flour mills. It is served by three railroads, and hence is an excellent site for the accumulation of produce. Thither, in the weeks preceding the passage of the Bronson Bodies, the multitudes of the United States flocked. "It is estimated that more than eleven million people from the east coast and three million from the west coast actually reached the Mississippi valley before the arrival of the Bodies. More than half of them were exterminated by the tide which rushed up the valley and which remained in the form of a gigantic bay in the new sunken area that now almost bisects the United States. "After presentation of our credentials and a considerable wait, we left our plane, which was put under a heavy guard, and drove in an automobile to the new 'White House'—a ramshackle rehabilitation of a huge metal garage. Here we found the President and his cabinet. He was worn and thin. His hand trembled visibly as he smoked. He looked at us with considerable interest and said: "I sent for you because I wished to hear about Cole Henderson's project. I know what he is planning to do, and I'm eager to learn if he thinks he will be successful." "We explained the situation to the President, and he was delighted to know that we had survived the crisis of the passing. He then continued gravely: "I believe that Henderson will be successful. You alone, perhaps, may carry away the hope of humanity and the records of the life on earth; I will return to the tasks confronting me here. "The theory of migration to the western plains was correct in so far as it concerned escape from the tides. It was mistaken only in that it underestimated the fury of the quakes, and particularly the force and velocity of the hurricane which accompanied them. I removed from Washington on the night of the twenty-fourth. I felt reasonably certain that with millions of my countrymen the onslaught might be survived. I doubted, and I still profoundly doubt, that the earth itself will be destroyed by a collision. Accurate as the predictions of the scientists may be, I still trust that God Himself will intervene, if necessary, with some unforeseen derangement and save the planet from total destruction. We turned back after assuring ourselves that this condition obtained along the entire coast. "Mr. James," Henderson said, "now adds to our geographical knowledge by revealing that the whole Mississippi basin, as well as the east coast and Gulf states, had been submerged. Cincinnati is under water. The sea swells not only over Memphis but over St. Louis, where it becomes a wide estuary stretching in two great arms almost to Chicago and to Davenport. "They next investigated the refuge area in the Middle West. Here they found indescribable chaos. Again I refer to the diary. "Following the directions we had been given, we flew to Hutchinson, Kansas. For a number of years Hutchinson had been chosen as the temporary capital of the state's refuge area. It is normally fifteen hundred feet above sea level. It is in the center of a rich grain, farm, poultry, dairy, live stock and lumber region. It has large packing plants, grain elevators, creameries, flour mills. It is served by three railroads, and hence is an excellent site for the accumulation of produce. Thither, in the weeks preceding the passage of the Bronson Bodies, the multitudes of the United States flocked. "It is estimated that more than eleven million people from the east coast and three million from the west coast actually reached the Mississippi valley before the arrival of the Bodies. More than half of them were exterminated by the tide which rushed up the valley and which remained in the form of a gigantic bay in the new sunken area that now almost bisects the United States. "After presentation of our credentials and a considerable wait, we left our plane, which was put under a heavy guard, and drove in an automobile to the new 'White House'—a ramshackle rehabilitation of a huge metal garage. Here we found the President and his cabinet. He was worn and thin. His hand trembled visibly as he smoked. He looked at us with considerable interest and said: "I sent for you because I wished to hear about Cole Henderson's project. I know what he is planning to do, and I'm eager to learn if he thinks he will be successful." "We explained the situation to the President, and he was delighted to know that we had survived the crisis of the passing. He then continued gravely: "I believe that Henderson will be successful. You alone, perhaps, may carry away the hope of humanity and the records of the life on earth; I will return to the tasks confronting me here. "The theory of migration to the western plains was correct in so far as it concerned escape from the tides. It was mistaken only in that it underestimated the fury of the quakes, and particularly the force and velocity of the hurricane which accompanied them. I removed from Washington on the night of the twenty-fourth. I felt reasonably certain that with millions of my countrymen the onslaught might be survived. I doubted, and I still profoundly doubt, that the earth itself will be destroyed by a collision. Accurate as the predictions of the scientists may be, I still trust that God Himself will intervene, if necessary, with some unforeseen derangement and save the planet from total destruction. "The President then described the passing of the Bronson Bodies and their effect on the prodigious plains settlement on the night of the twenty-fifth. (TO BE CONTINUED.)

CHAPTER IX
"THE man was George Schultz, a National Guardsman," Henderson continued, reading from Elliot's diary. "He said the mills at Pittsburgh had been working to the last moment. The government deemed that the great steel city was in no danger from the tides, and had used it for manufacturing during the last days. "After the quake, what was left of the administrative powers immediately organized the remnant of the police and National Guard. Food ran low; medical supplies gave out; the populace rebelled. "Three days before our arrival a mob armed itself and attempted to take over the distribution of the remaining food and supplies. I had appeared on the scene apparently after the mob and the forces of law and order had been fighting for three days; and it was not necessary for Schultz to explain to me that in a very short time the National Guardsmen and police would be routed; their numbers were vastly inferior; their ammunition was being exhausted, and organized warfare was out of the question in that madman's terrain. "I abandoned Schultz to his comrades and made my way back to the river. We lost no time in taking off." "Mr. James' diary next describes a hazardous flight across the Appalachians and their arrival at Washington. "When I say that the

WEAK AND SKINNY MEN, WOMEN AND CHILDREN

Saved by new Vitamins of Cod Liver Oil in tasteless tablets.

Pounds of firm healthy flesh instead of bare scraggy bones! New vigor, vim and energy instead of tired listlessness! Steady, quiet nerves! That is what thousands of people are getting through scientists' latest discovery—the Vitamins of Cod Liver Oil concentrated in little sugar coated tablets without any of its horrid, fishy taste or smell. McCoy's Cod Liver Oil Tablets, they're called! "Cod Liver Oil in Tablets", and they simply work wonders. A little boy of 3, seriously sick, got well and gained 10½ lbs. in just one month. A girl of thirteen after the same disease, gained 3 lbs. the first week and 2 lbs. each week after. A young mother who could not eat or sleep after baby came got all her health back and gained 10 lbs. in less than a month.

You simply must try McCoy's at once. Remember if you don't gain at least 3 lbs. of firm healthy flesh in a month get your money back. Demand and get McCoy's—the original and genuine Cod Liver Oil Tablets.

—approved by Good Housekeeping Institute. Refuse all substitutes—insist on the original McCoy's—there are none better.
