Culture Club Holds Annual Mid-Winter Fete

The annual mid-winter picnic of the Culture Club was held Friday at the home of Mrs. Phillip Keen. A picnic dinner was served at noon and each guest was requested to sing a "solo" before eating. Several of the guests who are members of Mrs. Helen Carmon's singing class, are eligible for a diploma, while a few members will have to take another first-year course before appearing in public. Many games were played and several contests given. The menu committee was in charge of Mrs. Clark Clover, Mrs. G. A. Jannasch and Mrs. J. W. McKnight. Mrs. Edward and Mrs. Clyde Swank had charge of the entertainment. It was another "red letter day" for the club and one long to be remembered, especially the singing.

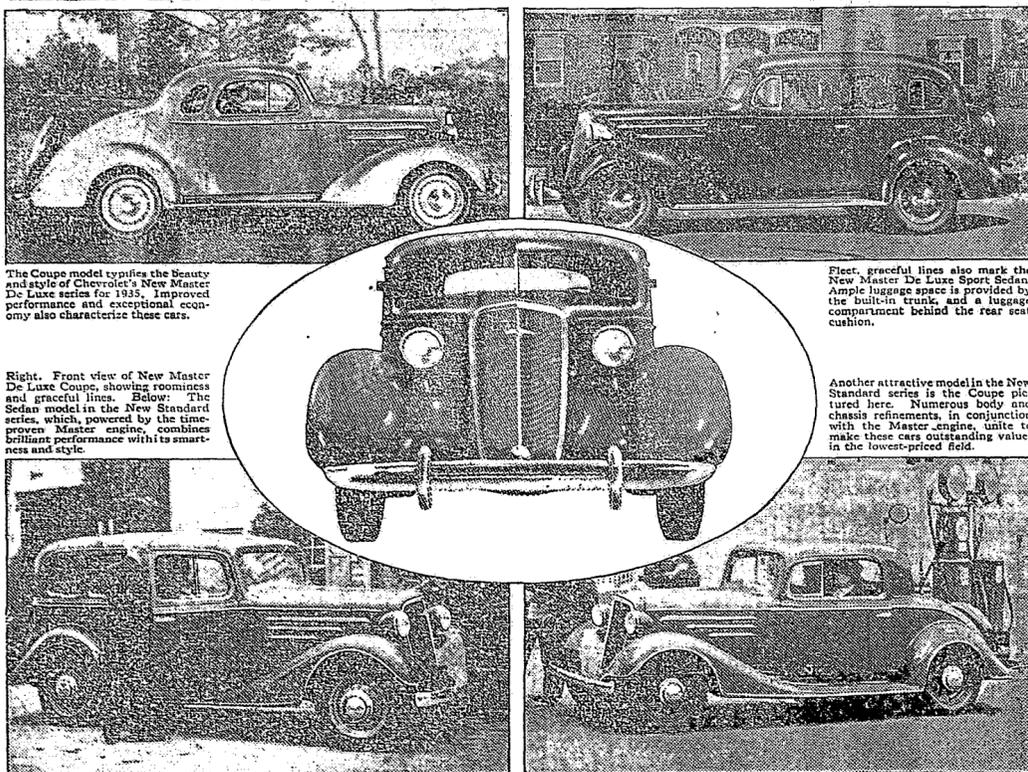

Olive Branch Arbor Gleaners Hold Meeting

The Gleaners of the Olive Branch Arbor held a meeting Friday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Clark. Fifteen members were present. Plans were made to give a play in February. Games and contests followed the social hour. Mrs. Richard Oimstead and Mrs. Ray Clark were prize winners in the contest. Pot luck supper was served.

Chevrolet Announces Two New Lines for 1935

The Coupe model typifies the beauty and style of Chevrolet's New Master De Luxe series for 1935. Improved performance and exceptional economy also characterize these cars.

Right: Front view of New Master De Luxe Coupe, showing roominess and graceful lines. Below: The Sedan model in the New Standard series, which, powered by the time-proven Master engine, combines brilliant performance with its smartness and style.

Fleet, graceful lines also mark the New Master De Luxe Sport Sedan. Ample luggage space is provided by the built-in trunk, and a luggage compartment behind the rear seat cushion.

Another attractive model in the New Standard series is the Coupe pictured here. Numerous body and chassis refinements, in conjunction with the Master engine, unite to make these cars outstanding values in the lowest-priced field.

Typical of Chevrolet's two new lines of cars are the models illustrated here. The Master De Luxe series reveals strong emphasis on beauty and style. Mechanically, the Master De Luxe series and the New Standard series have much in common, including the Master engine, in which numerous refinements have been made to enhance performance, durability and economy. As these pictures reveal, the New Master De Luxe departs distinctly from previous Chevrolets in the striking advance which has been made in body design and trim.

AT THE THEATRE

Ambitions Film Co. Stars Norma Shearer, March, Laughton

Three Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences Award winners head the cast of "The Barretts of Wimpole Street", to be shown for three days starting Sunday at the Hollywood Theatre. Norma Shearer, in the role of the poet Elizabeth, is starred opposite Fredric March, as the ardent Robert Browning—the same team which broke all records in "Smilin' Through". Charles Laughton, most recent Academy Award winner, appears in the grim and powerful role of the elder Barrett, his first American picture since the international hit, "Henry the Eighth." The supporting cast is equally extraordinary. Maureen O'Sullivan, last seen in "Tarzan and His Mate," plays the rebellious sister Henrietta, and others seen are Una O'Connor, Ralph Forbes and Katherine Alexander. "The Barretts of Wimpole Street" is a brilliant production—brilliantly conceived, written, acted and directed. The players present a tender, poetic love story intermingled with a grim, uncompromising and diabolical influence that motivates the drama. The performances of each player is so finished, so smooth and rich that comparison is impossible. Remember, the film starts with a special 2:30 matinee Sunday and continues through Tuesday. One of America's immortal classics. "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" has been made into a charming, absorbing and delightful photoplay and comes to the Hollywood tomorrow (Friday) and Saturday as feature number one of a deluxe double feature bill, with Pauline Lord, W. C. Fields and Zasu Pitts in the featured roles. Adapted from the play by Alice Hegan Rice and Anne Crawford Flexner, the film also incorporates several elements of the book which has delighted millions of readers, young and old, for nearly two generations. The sweet sophisticate of the campus; favorite of every male, yet sweetheart of none. That's Mary Carlisle, toast of the collegiate world, as she enacts the title role in Monogram's musical romance "Girl of My Dreams," which is the second attraction on Friday-Saturday's double bill. Sterling Holloway, young college editor comedian, Eddie Nugent, Arthur Lake, Creighton Chaney and GIGI Parrish completes the juvenile bill of this all-juvenile college musical romance, the fitting sequel to "Sweetheart of Sigma Chi." A new screen team composed of Dick Powell and Josephine Hutchinson, the famous stage star, is captivating audiences everywhere in the new rollicking First National Romance, "Happiness Ahead," which will be shown at the Hollywood on Bargain Nights next week Wednesday and Thursday. Dick "stops the show" with his inimitable voice, his magnetic personality, his "million dollar smile" and his real acting talent, but he does it with the aid of the brilliant new film star, Miss Hutchinson, who plays opposite him. These two young players have never appeared to better advantage. Powell's catchy songs include "Pop Goes My Heart" and "Beauty Must Be Love." He sings a third in a comedy duet with Frank McHugh, entitled "Massaging Window Panes." The entire cast is a talented one and includes such other notable players as John Halliday, Allen Jenkins, Ruth Donnelly, Marjorie Gatenon and Gavin Gordon.

A Good Bargain for Grocer Jones!

SOME of the 15 out-of-town checks deposited by Grocer Jones yesterday, will travel a week before the money they represent will be back in our hands. These 15 checks may in that time entail a total of 180 clerical operations, with stationery, postage, etc., costing this and other banks 60 cents or more, handling expense alone.

Grocer Jones appreciates this fact, and he, therefore, maintains a balance in his account large enough to reimburse the bank for the cost of this service. It is a "good bargain" for Mr. Jones and for the bank—neither has lost, while both have gained through worthwhile banking service.

THE NARRATIVE

CHAPTER I.—David Ransdell, approaching New York on the liner Europa, receives a succession of telegrams offering him $100,000 for an exclusive newspaper interview dealing with the mystery of the strange happenings in South Africa. Ransdell, noted aviator has been secretly commissioned as Professor Bronson and Professor Bronson, the astronomer, to fly across the Mediterranean to the fact-finding and concentrating on a case containing photographic plates. His instructions are to deliver them to Dr. Hendron, who is in New York. Tony Drake calls at the Hendrons' apartment. Ransdell arrives and Hendron, with his wife, who is deeply in love, introduces Tony to Ransdell.

CHAPTER II.—New York newspapers publish a statement made by Hendron and Bronson in which they claim to be the world's greatest scientists. The prepared statement says that Professor Bronson has discovered two planets, which must have been an average from another star or sun in the galaxy of the Milky Way. The space for an incredible time, until they came to a region of the heavens which brought them at last under the attraction of the sun. The statement ends: "Their previous course, consequently, has been modified by the sun, and as a result, they are now approaching us. The results of the observations must be the end of the earth. The approaching bodies are referred to as Bronson and Bronson, and the latter being the smaller—about the size of the earth, and revolving about Bronson, which has the moon does about the earth."

CHAPTER III.—"It's going to be doomsday, isn't it?" Tony Drake asks Eve. "No, Tony—more than doomsday. Dawn after doomsday, when his bright, brilliant, brilliant first time the Bronson bodies approach the earth they will not hit it, but will pass, and the other will hit the earth and demolish it. To make sure of the matter, I have Bronson Beta, so much like the earth, is what is occupying the minds of the members of the League of the Last Days."

CHAPTER IV.—Hendron tells Tony he is to be a member of the crew of the Space Ship which Hendron plans to build, with the idea of landing on Bronson Beta, and the planet gives him to gain a knowledge of agriculture and proficiency in manual arts and sciences. Hendron rounds up suitable men and women to build the ship at a camp near the Hendron estate in northern Michigan. Just before the first approach, Tony returns to Hendron's existing conditions throughout the country.

CHAPTER V.—Hendron has not been able to find a material to log which will withstand the heat and pressure of atomic energy to build the Space Ship. The night before Hendron and his immediate party are to fly to the site of the construction through the streets of New York.

CHAPTER VI.—The tides sweep back to the Appalachians on the east and the mountains on the Pacific side, and quakes change the entire surface of the earth. The Washington government moves many millions as possible to the great Mississippi valley. The Hendron settlement survives unscathed, earthquakes, the seismic disturbances having started the day before and ending with New York for the continent.

CHAPTER VII.—Bronson Alpha collides with the moon and wipes it out. Ransdell and Eilat, an English poet whom Hendron has invited to join the colony, leave on an expedition to the continent. Hendron's joy is in ignorance of conditions elsewhere. They return safely, reporting almost no destruction and a reign of lawlessness throughout the country.

CHAPTER VIII.—Three weeks later, Ransdell with Peter Vandergrift, prominent New Yorker, selected by Hendron as a member of the party on the Space Ship, and James Eilat, poet, and Bronson Beta, which they return alive, and Ransdell has found and brought back a sample of the metal which scientists have been unable to discover, and which is indispensable to the construction of the Space Ship.

"Throughout the district the earth opened up. Lava poured from it. On the western boundary of our territory, which extended into eastern Colorado, a veritable sea of lava and molten metal poured into the country drained by the Solomon Springs, Smoky Hill and Arkansas rivers. A huge volcanic fume was thrown up along the North Platte. Many if not most of our flimsily constructed buildings were toppled to the ground in utter confusion. However, for the first few hours of this awful disaster most of our people escaped. It was the hurricane which went through our ranks like a scythe. No one knows what velocity the wind attained, but an idea of it may be had by the fact that it swept the landscape almost bare, that it moved our stone buildings.

"This wind-driven scourge, which continued for thirty-six hours, abated on a scene of ruin. When I emerged from the cyclone I did not believe that a single one of my countrymen had survived. I until I saw them reappear slowly, painfully, more often wounded than not, like soldiers coming out of shell-holes after an extensive bombardment. Our frantic efforts had been for nothing. With the remnants of our ranks, we collected that we could find of our provisions and stores. In that hurricane my hopes of a united and reformed United States were dashed to the ground. I now am struggling to preserve, not so much the nation, but that fraction of the race which has been left under my command, and I struggle against tremendous odds."

"We now come," Hendron said, "to the last stage of this remarkable flight. They had been flying for three weeks, sleeping little and ating on bad food. They decided to go back by way of St. Paul and to make.

"On the way to St. Paul they were not down on a small lake, and it was there that Ransdell noticed the metallic metal in a flow of magma. They investigated it tonight of their journey to reach it. When they were sure of its nature they beamed supplies and brought them back to the plane. Repairs to the feeding system were required; they took off on the day before their return, and reached the vicinity of St. Paul safely. It was in St. Paul, less than two hundred miles from here, that they received the injuries with which they returned. St. Paul was fit much the same condition as Pittsburgh, except that it had undergone the further decay occasioned by two additional weeks of famine and pestilence. They landed on the Mississippi river near the shore, late that night. Almost immediately they were attacked, doubtless because it was believed they possessed food. The last words in James' diary are these: 'Boats have put out toward us. One of them has a machine gun mounted in the bow. Ransdell has succeeded in starting the motors, but the plane is listing. I believe that bullets have perforated one of the pontoons and that it is filling. We may never leave the water. It may be that it will be necessary to repulse the first boatload before we can take off. ...'

Hendron dropped the seventh notebook on the table. "You may reconstruct what followed my flight. The hand-to-hand fight on the plane with a boatload of hungry-driven marines—a fight in which all three heroic members of the airplane company were hurt. We may imagine them at last beating back their assailants, and with their floundering ship taking off before a second boatload was upon them. We may imagine Ransdell gulping his ship through the night with gritted teeth, while his occasional backward glances offered him little reassurance of the safety of his comrades. The rest we know."

Autumn had set in, but it was like no autumn the world had ever known before. The weather remained unnaturally hot. The skies were still hazy. An enormous amount of fire volcanic dust remained suspended in the upper air currents.

The neighboring vault, opened in the vicinity of St. Paul, supplied Hendron with more than the necessary amount of the new metal, which could be machined but which withstood even the heat of the atomic blast. Hendron had not waited for his explorers to recover. On the day after the reading of the diaries he had flown with another pilot, found a source of the strange material from the center of the earth, and he had loaded the plane. Repeated trips had provided more than enough metal for the tubes of the atomic engines.

The engine makers could not melt the metal by any heat they applied; they could not fuse it; but they could cut it and by patient machining shape it into lining of tubes which, at last, endured the frightful temperatures of the atom releasing its power.

The problem of the engine for the Space Ship was solved. This transformed the psychology of the camp.

And now there ensued a period of frantic impatience for the return of the Bronson Bodies! For the camp, in its new hysteria, had become perfectly confident that the Space Ship must succeed in making its desperate journey. The camp was resolved—that part of it which should be closest—to go.

Tony kept on at his work, tormented by a torture of his own. Together with Eilat James and Vandergrift, Ransdell had now recovered from his wounds.

For his part in the great adventure the pilot would have become popular, even if he had not also proved the discoverer of the metal that would not melt. That by itself would have lifted him above every other man in the camp.

Not above Hendron in authority; for the fiercer never in the slightest attempted to assert authority. Ransdell became, indeed, even more retiring and reserved than before; and so the women of the camp, and especially the younger ones, worshiped him.

When Eve walked with Ransdell, as she often did, Tony became a potential killer. In reaction he could laugh at himself; he knew it was the hysteria working in him; his fear and terror at facing almost inevitable and terrible death, and at knowing that Eve also must be annihilated. It was these emotions that at moments almost broke out in a demonstration against Ransdell.

When Tony was with Eve, she seemed to him less the civilized creature of cultured and sophisticated society, and more an impulsive and primitive woman.

Her very features seemed altered; her lips were darker and larger, her lips softer, her hair filled with a brighter sheen. She was stronger, also, and more taut.

"We're going to get over," she said to him one day.

"Yes," agreed Tony. No one would openly doubt it, whatever he hid in his head. "How do you?" he began, and then made his challenge less directly personal by adding:

"How do you girls now like the idea of ceasing to be individuals and becoming biological representatives of the human race—after we get across?"

He saw Eve blush, and the warmth in her stirred him. "We talk about it, of course," she replied. "And I suppose we'll do."

"Breed the race, you mean," Tony continued mercilessly. "Reproduce the type—mating with whoever is best to insure the strongest and best children for the place, and to establish a new generation of the greatest possible variety from the few individuals which we can hope to land safely. That's the program."

"Yes," said Eve, "that's the purpose."

For a minute he did not speak, thinking, his hands clenched; then: "Would you care?"

"Care, Tony?" she began, her face flooded with color. She checked herself. "No one must care; we have sworn not to care—to conquer eating. And we must train ourselves to it now, you know. We can't suddenly stop caring about such things, when we find ourselves on Bronson Beta, unless we've at least made a start at downing selfishness here."

"You call it selfishness?"

"I know it's not the word. Tony; but I've no word for it. Morals isn't the word, either. What are morals, fundamentally, Tony? Morals are nothing but the code of conduct required of an individual in the best interests of the group of which he's a member. So what's 'moral' here wouldn't be moral at all on Bronson Beta."

"D—n Bronson Beta! Have you no feeling for me?"

"Tony, is there any sense in making more difficult for ourselves what we may have to do?"

"Yes; I—n it," Tony burst out again. "I want it difficult. I want it impossible for you!"

Wanderers from other places began to discover the camp. While they were few in number, it was possible to feed and clothe and even shelter them, at least temporarily. Then there was no choice but to give them a meal and send them away. But daily the dealings with the desperate, reckless groups became more and more ugly and hazardous.

Tony directed the extension of the protection of the camp by a barrier of barbed wire half a mile beyond the buildings. There were four gates which he sentinelled and where he turned back all vagrant visitors. If this was cruelly, he had no alternative but chaos. Let the barriers be broken, and the settlement would be overwhelmed.

But bigger and uglier bands continued to come. It became a commonplace to turn them back at the bayonet point and under the threat of machine guns. It became unsafe for anyone—man or woman—to leave the enclosure except by airplane.

Reinforcements came from the center of the camp—Jack Taylor and two more of the younger men. "Hurt, Tony?" Taylor challenged him.

"No," replied Tony. "Who's killed in the buildings?"

"Not Hendron," said Taylor, "or Eve—though she was one of the girls that went out to attend to the wounded. Two of the girls were hit, Tony. At the ship, I'll take care here for you. Good luck."

Tony found Hendron inside the Space Ship, and there, since its metal made an armor for it, a light was burning. Hendron sat at a table; it was now his headquarters.

"Who's hurt?" asked Tony.

"Too many," Hendron dismissed this. "What do you think they are doing?" he challenged Tony abruptly.

"Getting ready to come again," Tony returned.

"Tonight, probably?"

Tony glanced at his wrist watch; it was eleven o'clock. "Midnight will be my guess, sir," he said.

"Will they get in next time?" Hendron demanded.

"They can't if they come on more resolutely. They can do more than they have done. They could have carried us an hour ago, if they'd come on."

"Exactly," nodded Hendron. "And how few are fewer. We will be fewer still, of course, after the next attack; and fewer yet, after they get in."

"Yes, sir."

"However," said Hendron thoughtfully, "that will be, in one way, an advantage."

Tony was used, by now, to be astonished by Hendron; yet he said, "I don't follow you, sir."

"We will defend the enclosure as long as we can, Tony," Hendron said. "But when they are in—it they get in—no one is to throw himself away fighting them aimlessly. They must be delayed as long as they can be; but when they are in, we gather—all of us that are left, Tony—here."

"Inside this ship. Hadn't I told you, Tony? Don't you see? Don't you see?"

Tony stared at his chief and straightened, the blood of rage rising hot within him. "Of course I see," he almost shouted. "Of course I see."

"Very well. Then issue cloths—white cloths. Tony; distribute them for arm-bands, so in the dark, we will know our own."

"Yes, sir. But, Eve is safe?"

"She's not hurt, I hear. You might see her for an instant. The woman was tearing up bandages. Tony looked her in a room with twenty others, tearing white cloth into strips. At least he had one word with her.

"Tony! Take care of yourself!"

"How about you, Eve?"

She disregarded this; said only: "Get back to the ship, Tony, after the fight. Oh, get back to the ship!" He went out again. A bullet pinged on the wall beside him. The bursts of machine-gun fire sounded uglier; there were groans again, and screams. With his burden of machine-gun cartridges, he returned to the post he had fought.

"That you, Tony?" Jack Taylor halted. "Cartridges? Great! We'll scrap those bimboes. H—! Just in time, I'd say. Here they come!"

"Listen!" yelled Tony. "If they get in, delay them but don't mix with them; each man tie a white cloth on his sleeve—and retreat to the ship!" And he issued the strips he had brought with him.

From the buildings reinforcements arrived—six men with guns slung over their shoulders, and bayonets that caught a glint from the firing. They carried another machine gun.

One of the new men produced a Very pistol. His private property, he explained, which he had brought along "for emergencies."

"It's one now," Tony said simply, and took the pistol from him. He fired it; and the Very light, hanging in the air, revealed him at the wife everywhere. A thousand men—two thousand; no sense even in estimating them.

Tony again claimed the machine gun. He made a flat fan of the flashes before him as he swung the gun back and forth. He was killing men by scores, he knew; but he knew, also, that if the hundreds had the nerve to strike, they were "in."

They were in!

"Fall back! Fall back to the ship—fighting!" Tony yelled again and again. He did not need to tell his men to fight. The trouble was they still wanted to fight, holding on here.

A few obeyed him. The rest could not be suddenly realized; and he had to leave them, dying. Jack Taylor was beside him, firing a rifle. They were five altogether who were falling back, firing.

Figures from the black leaped at them, and it was hard to hand. Tony fought with a bayonet, then with a clubbed fist, madly and wildly swinging. He was struck, and reeled.

"Come on!" cried Jack Taylor's voice, and with Taylor he ran in the dark. The dormitories sprang into light, windows shone, and spread illumination which showed that they were deserted and were being used now by the defenders of the camp to light the space already abandoned.

The attackers could not shoot out hundreds of globs so simply as they had smashed the searchlights. And they could not advance into that illuminated area, under the machine guns and rifles of the laboratories. They had first to take the deserted dormitories and darken them.

They were doing this; but it delayed them. It held them up a few minutes. Room by room, dormitory windows went black. The lights were not being turned out; they were being smashed and the windows panes were crushing. Yells celebrated the smashing and shots.

The yells ceased; some sort of assault was being reorganized.

Tony moved in the dark. "Keep down—down—down—down," he was crying. "Below the window-line. Down!" For bullets from machine guns, evidently aimed from the dormitory windows, were striking him.

Many did not obey him; he did not expect them to. Yells at the farther end of the main laboratory told that it was hand-to-hand there, in the dark. A charge—a rush had been pushed home.

Tony found Taylor beside him; they had stuck together in the dark; and a dozen others rose and ran with them into the melee. The best brains of the modern world, fighting hand to hand with savages! Shoot and stab and club wildly, desperately, in the dark!

More and more lay where they fell. Tony, stumbling and slipping on the sticky wet floor, realized that this rush was stopped. There was nobody left in the room for fight—nobody but two or three distinguished as friends by the spots of the arm bands.

"Jack?" gasped Tony; and Taylor's voice answered him. They were staggering and bleeding, both of them; but they had survived the fight together. Tony found the flashlight which, all through the fight, he had had in his pocket, and he bent to the floor and held it close to the faces.

He caught breath, bitterly. Bronson was there. Bronson, the discoverer of the two stranger planets whose passing had loosed this savagery; Dr. Sven Bronson, the first scientist of the southern hemisphere by there in his blood, a bayonet through his throat. Beside him Dodson was dying, his right arm jammed almost off. A few of those less hurt were rising.

"To the ship! Into the ship!" Tony cried to them. "Everybody into the ship!" There was no alternative.

Creeping on hands and knees, from wounds or from caution, and dragging the wounded with them, the men started to retreat to the Space Ship. Women were helping them. Yells and whistles warned that another rush was gathering, and that this would be from all sides.

Tony caught up in his arms a young man who was barely breathing. He had a bullet through him; but he lived. Tony staggered with him into the great metal rocket.

The second rush was coming. No doubt of it, and it would be utterly overwhelming. There would be no survivors—but the women. None. For the horde would take no prisoners. They were killing the wounded already—their own badly wounded and the camp's wounded, that they had captured. Eilat James, a bullet through his thigh, but saved by the dark, crawled in with this information. Tony carried him into the ship.

They were all in the ship—all the survivors. The horde did not suspect it. Then they suddenly seemed to realize that the ship was the last refuge. They surrounded it, firing at it. Their bullets glanced from its metal. Somebody who had grenades bombed it.

A frightful flame shattered them. Probably they imagined, at first, that the grenades had exploded some sort of powder magazine within the huge metal tube. Few of those near to the ship, and outside it, lived to see what was happening.

The great metal rocket rose from the earth, the awful blast from its power tubes lifting it. The frightful heat seared and incinerated, killing at its touch. A hundred of the horde were dead before the ship was above the buildings.

Hendron lifted it five hundred feet farther, and the blast spread in a funnel below it. A thousand died in that instant. Hendron ceased to elevate the ship. Instead, he lowered it a little, and the power of the atomic blast which was keeping two thousand tons of metal and of human flesh suspended over the earth, played upon the ground—and upon the flesh on the ground—as its force ever released by man before.

Half an hour later, Hendron brought the ship down.

A pale delicate light carried away the depths of night. From the numbness and exhaustion which had seized the colony roused itself. It gazed with only eyes upon that which surrounded it. The last battle of brains against brutality had been fought on the bosom of the earth. And the intelligence of man had conquered his primitive ruthlessness. But at what a cost! Around a table in the office of the laboratories a few men and women stared at each other; Hendron pale and shaken, Tony in shoes and trousers, white bandages over his wounds; Eve staring from him to the slant, broad-shouldered, silent form of Ransdell, whose hands, blackened, ugly, hung limply at his sides, whose gorilla-like strength seemed to have deserted him; Smith, the surgeon, stupefied in the face of this hopeless summons of his calling.

At last Hendron sucked a breath into his lungs. "My friends, what must be done is obvious. We must first bury the dead. There are no survivors of the enemy. If others are gathering, I believe we need fear no further attack. Doctor Smith, you will kindly take charge of all hospital and medical arrangements for our people. I will request that those who are able to do so appear immediately on the air-plane field. I shall dispatch the majority of them to your assistance, and with those who remain I shall take such steps as are necessary. Let's go."

Only three hundred and eighty persons were counted by Tony as they struggled shuddering to the landing field. Almost half of them were women, for the women, except in the case of individuals who had joined the fighting voluntarily, had been secluded.

Tony, with ten other men, a pitiful number for the appalling task that confronted them, went down to the field and began to gather up in trucks the bodies there. Not far from the cantonment, on what had been a lumber road, an enormous assuress yawned in the earth.

All that day they tended their own wounded. Many of them perished.

In those nightmare days no one spoke unless it was necessary. Life-long friendships and strong new friendships had been obliterated. Loves that in two months had flowered into vehement reality were ended. For two weeks abysmal sadness and funeral silence held them. Only the necessary ardors of their toil prevented many of them from going mad. But at the end of two weeks Tony, returning from an errand to the fissure where the last bodies had been entombed by a blast of dynamite, stood on the hill above the campment and saw that once again the grass grew green, once again the buildings were clear and trim.

When he stood there his attention was attracted by a strange sound—the sound of an airplane motor, and the plane itself became visible. It landed presently on their field, and Tony was one of several men who approached it. The cabin door opened and out stepped a man. There was something familiar about him to Tony, but he could not decide what it was. The man had a high, crackling voice. His hair was snow-white. His features were drawn, and his skill was yoked. His pilot remained at the controls of the plane, and the old man bobbed toward Tony, saying as he approached, "Please take me to Mr. Hendron."

Tony stepped forward. "I'm Mr. Hendron's assistant. We don't allow visitors here. Perhaps you will tell me your errand."

"I'll see Hendron," snapped the other.

Tony realized that the man estimated no mistake. "Perhaps," he said coldly, "if you will tell me your reason for wanting to see Hendron, I can arrange for the interview."

The old man almost shrieked. "You can arrange an interview! I tell you, young fellow, I said I would see Hendron, and that's all there is to it." He came abruptly closer, snatched Tony's lapel, cocked his head, and peered into his face. "You're Drake, aren't you, young 'Tony Drake?"

Suddenly Tony recognized the man. He was staggered. Before him stood Nathaniel Borgon, fourth richest man in America, friend of all tycoons of the land, friend indeed of Hendron himself. Tony had last seen Borgon in Hendron's house in New York, when Borgon had been immaculate, powerful, self-assured, and barely approaching middle age. He now looked senile, degenerate and slovenly.

"Aren't you Drake?" the crackling voice repeated. Tony nodded mechanically. "Yes," he said, "come with me."

Hendron did not recognize Borgon until Tony had pronounced his name. Then that his face there appeared briefly a look of consternation, and Borgon in his shrill, grating voice began to talk excitedly. "Of course I knew what you were working at here, Hendron. I knew all about it. Meant to offer you financial assistance, but got tangled up taking care of my affairs in the last few weeks. I haven't been able to come here before, for a variety of reasons. But now I'm here. You'll take me with you when you go, of course." He banged his fist on the table in a bizarre burlesque of his former gestures. "You'll take me all right, all right, and I'll tell you why you'll take me—for my money. When all else fails, I'll have my money. I ask only that you spare my life, that you'll take me from this awful place, and in turn go out to my plane, go out to the plane that is waiting there for you. Look inside." Suddenly his voice sank to a whisper, and his head was shot forward. "It's full of bills, full of bills, thousand-dollar bills, ten-thousand-dollar bills—stacked with them, bales of them, bundles of them—millions, Hendron, millions! That's the price I'm offering you for my life."

Hendron and Tony looked at this man in whose hands the destiny of colossal American industries had once been so firmly held; and they knew that he was mad.

They sent Borgon away with his pilot and his plane full of money; and the last words of the financier were pronounced in a voice intended to be threatening as he leaned out of the cabin door. "I'll get an injunction against you from the President himself. I'll have the Supreme court behind me within twenty-four hours."

Nearly three weeks after the attack a census was taken. There were two hundred and nine uninjured women, one hundred and eighty-two uninjured men. There were about eighty men and women who were expected wholly to recover. There were more than a hundred who would suffer some disability. Four hundred and ninety-three people had been killed or had died after the conflict.

Work of course was redistributed. More than five months lay ahead of them. The Space Ship could be completed, even with this reduced group, in three weeks.

On one of the unusually warm afternoons in December Tony received what he considered afterward the greatest compliment ever paid to him in his life. He was making one of his regular tours of the stockyards when Ransdell overtook him. In all their recent encounters Ransdell had not spoken a hundred words to Tony; but now he said almost gruffly, "I'd like to speak to you."

Tony turned and smiled. The South African hesitated, and almost blushed. "I'm not talkative," he said bluntly, "but I've been trying to find you alone for weeks." Again he hesitated.

"That fight you put up—" Ransdell took a huge pocket knife from his flannel shirt and commenced to open it and shut it blade nervously. "That was a d—n fine piece of work, fellow."

"What was yours?" Tony replied, heartily. Ransdell held out his hand. They gripped, and in that grip the hands of lesser men would have been broken. From that time on those rivals in love were as blood brothers.

Another general meeting was held in the dining hall. Hendron again took charge.

"The matter which I have to discuss with you," he began, "is one which will come, I am sure, as a distinct surprise. It is the result of my earliest thought and of careful calculations. From the standpoint of realism—and, I have learned that all of you are courageous enough to face truths—I am forced to add that my decision has been made possible by the elimination of our numbers."

"All of you know that I founded this village of ours for the purpose of transferring to the planet that will take the place of the earth a company of about one hundred people, with the hope that they might perpetuate our doomed race. It seemed to me that a ship large enough to accommodate such a number might be fabricated and launched by the one thousand persons who were originally assembled here. It is obvious, of course, that the more intelligent and healthy the units of humanity we are able to transfer to the planet, the better the chances for founding a new race will be."

He paused and his eyes roved over the throng. Not a breath was drawn, and not a word was spoken.

"My friends, we are five hundred, in number. On the night of the attack, we all of us—and some who since have died—crammed into the Space Ship. We all realize that no such crowding will be possible on the voyage through space; we all realize that much cargo, other than humanity, must be stowed on the ship if there is to be any point and purpose in our safe landing upon another planet. One hundred persons remains my estimate of the probable crew and passenger list of the ship that saved us all on that night."

"But I have come to the conclusion that by dint of tremendous effort and co-operation, and largely because of the success of the experiments which we have made with Ransdell's metal, it will be possible within the remaining months of time to construct a second and larger vessel which will be capable of removing the entire residual personnel of this camp."

Hendron sat down. No cheer was lifted. As if they had seen the Gorgon's Head, the audience was turned to stone. The sentence imposed by the death lottery had been lifted. Every man and woman who sat there was free. Every one of them had a chance to live, to fight and to make a new career elsewhere in the starlit firmament.

Mr. Picard Resigns
Frank A. Picard has tendered his resignation as advisor to the State Liquor Control Commission, which took effect Jan. 1. Contained in his letter of resignation were several constructive recommendations. He first commended the present liquor law and declared its provisions to have been proved sound but declared that the type of licenses should be limited to the sale of beer, wine and spirits, eliminating the license now offered for sale of beer and light wines. He also suggests that the age limit be raised from 18 to 21 years for the purchaser of alcoholic beverages and also recommends that the present limit of profit of $1,200 a year for the specially designated liquor dispensaries be removed. In order to take the business out of politics, Mr. Picard recommends that all employees be placed under civil service rules.

Every person becoming a member was required to pay the sum of $2 for contingent expense, plus 75c to the agent taking the application. The secretary furnished bonds of $1,000, terms of insurance were limited to five years. Secretary John C. Cobe, Bridgman, now in charge of the headquarters in Buchanan, states that payments have been much prompter in the past year than in several years past, and that the affairs of the company indicate better business conditions. During the month of December the company gained 51 new members, canceling only nine, a net gain of 42, and a net gain of $105,000 in new business.

Mrs. C. V. Pennell Dies Suddenly in Mt. Tabor District

Mrs. Minnie V. Pennell, 47, died suddenly at her home in the Mt. Tabor district at 1:30 p. m. yesterday, after an illness of a week which had not been considered serious. She was born near Baroda Dec. 6, 1887, the daughter of Levi and Lizzie Bachman Shafer, and had lived the past 13 years across the road from the Mt. Tabor grange. She was married to Clyde E. Pennell Oct. 8, 1921. She was actively identified with the Mt. Tabor grange and with the Oronoko Methodist church. She is survived by her husband; by three children, Mrs. Dorothy Stet, Chicago; Mrs. Milton Mitchell, R. R. Buchanan; Ralph Painter, at home and by one stepdaughter, Mrs. Larue Halverson, Flint, Mich. The remains are at the Swem mortuary awaiting arrangements for the funeral rites.

INDIANA & MICHIGAN ELECTRIC CO.

TO OUR CUSTOMERS:

During the inflation period, when the prices of other items in the family budget were soaring, the cost of Electricity was steadily declining. Since 1927, the cost of electricity in the homes on our lines has declined 32 percent.

No longer is an electric service bill just a lighting bill. In most homes today it includes, in addition to lighting and small appliances, such conveniences as an electric iron, a vacuum cleaner, a washing machine and radio entertainment.

Every year, new or improved electrical appliances for the home are developed which bring to it more and more convenience and pleasure. We have made 3 rate reductions since 1927. The lowered rates combined with the increased use of electricity have resulted in reduced cost to you... in 1934 you paid 5.5 cents a kilowatt-hour as compared with 8.1 cents in 1927.

H. F. Gishel

Vice President & General Manager

ELECTRICITY HAS GONE DOWN!

Over Breakfast Coffee

(By A. C. Clapp)

As the press voices the people on the new deal—newspaper comment on the new deal transcends party affiliation proved by almost universal criticism in part or in toto, mild or caustic of the government's policies in relief and reconstruction.

Chicago papers and those of Detroit and of South Bend, Saturday Evening Post, Colliers and Liberty adequately represent public opinion in this region and presumably over the United States. And the newspapers of these cities of varying political party trend print a preponderance of adverse or at least questioning comment. The Saturday Evening Post finds much of the impractical and hurtful in the New Deal and very little that is commendable, and its list of governmental shortcomings runs lengthily. Threatening inflation, alleged threats to freedom of speech, confusion and contradictions of government plans, absence of definite statements of public plans, expenditure menacing a balanced budget, failure of NRA to improve capital, labor relation, government invasion into private business, subversion of Congressional proper functioning are some of the challenging opinions here marshalled against the New Deal. Of course on any problem more can be said contrary than in favor.

The mentioned newspapers with one accord attach some or all of these measures and assailing them from varying angles its fair to assume they often speak rightly, particularly when in accord.

Collier's frequently endorses the New Deal and in a current issue, "Plan or Perish" by George Creel, writes glowingly of the Tennessee Valley Development which is elsewhere cited as pernicious government usurping of private initiative. Liberty does not go in for elaborated editorials and so far as it writes on the New Deal, in this writer's notice, favors it.

Comment of the press varies from the mild ironies of Brisbane to the trenchant structures of Richard Washburn Child and other writers in the Chicago papers.

Most all prints note with satisfaction some changes in front of the administration.

The plan of Federal Relief Administrator Harry L. Hopkins plan to eliminate cash doles and to substitute work relief widely acclaimed in the newspapers. The President's intention to turn much Federal relief back on local communities was also generally commended in paper and magazine.

The people by the voice of the press healthily give the New Deal a square deal and the people via the press do not lambaste the New Deal root and branch. But judged by constant and copious flow of comment they do want to know what's what and why.

WEAK AND SKINNY MEN, WOMEN AND CHILDREN

Saved by new Vitamins of Cod Liver Oil in tasteless tablets.

Pounds of firm healthy flesh instead of bony scrawny bones! New vigor, vim and energy instead of tired listlessness! Steady, quiet nerves! That is what thousands of people are getting through scientists' latest discovery—the Vitamins of Cod Liver Oil concentrated in little sugar coated tablets without any of its horrid, fatty taste or smell. Medico's Cod Liver Oil Tablets, they're called! Cod Liver Oil in Tablets, they're simply work wonders. A little boy of 3, seriously sick, got well and gained 10½ lbs. in just one month. A girl of thirteen after the same dose, gained 3 lbs. the first week and 2 lbs. each week after. A young mother who could not eat or sleep, her baby came out all her health back and gained 10 lbs. in less than a month.

.. make it a Happy New Year by solving your Hot Water Problems

Here is a plan which will give everyone 24-hour hot water service.

Our rental-purchase plan is taking 'em by storm. An automatic storage water heater at a trivial amount each month.

In addition you have the option at any time during rental period to purchase the heater outright. All rental payments may be applied on the purchase price of heater.

—Large Investment
—Attention required
—Dirt, ashes or smoke
—Stairs to climb
—Fires to stoke

Just open the faucet and enjoy steaming hot water, day or night, at a surprisingly low cost.

You can enjoy this service first and pay for it monthly. Call at your Gas Office today or telephone 4, and a representative will call and explain this plan without any obligations to you.

MICHIGAN GAS & ELECTRIC COMPANY

1935 - Wyman's Diamond Jubilee Year

For 75 years the Wyman store has served continuously the people in all communities of southern Michigan and northern Indiana. Under only two managements it has carried through, since 1860, the principles and policies upon which it was founded and because of which it has prospered—the principles of satisfying the customer with good merchandise in an honorable and courteous manner.

And now comes 1935—Wyman's Diamond Jubilee Year! A year of great events! For we are celebrating—not with a year long sale but—

FIRST—with an especially planned series of VALUE-GIVING JUBILEE EVENTS. We will offer, from time to time through the year, special purchases of reasonable, dependable, Wyman-quality merchandise at definite savings.

SECOND—by having—day in and day out all year long—new, fresh beautiful serviceable things, when our customers want them at the lowest prices possible for GOOD QUALITY.

JANUARY JUBILEE SALE

Event No. 1 In Our 1935 Celebration

A greater store-wide sale to start a greater Wyman year. Bargains in every department. Special purchases also odds and ends reduced for clearance. Here are three especially important values for your home—

Inlaid Linoleum $1.29 sq. yd.	Broadloom Carpet $2.29 sq. yd.	Ruffled Curtains $1.79 pr.

Do your kitchen, bathroom, bedrooms need new floor coverings? Now is the time to get them. Such a value as this in long wearing, inlaid ARMSTRONG'S and imported linoleums (burlap back) is a rare event. The patterns are discontinued but the linoleum is first class in every way. A large stock to choose from.

Solve that extra size room problem with this Broadloom Axminster carpet. Buy it now at Wyman's and save money. It is nine feet wide and can be cut any length. For example, a 9x15 foot rug with hand bound ends is only $37.35. Two charming Early American patterns suitable for living rooms, dining rooms or bedrooms.

Beautiful crisp new curtains of fine durable marquisette with plump dots, carefully spaced. Each curtain is 47 inches wide—94 inches for the pair. They measure a full 2 1/4 yards long finished and have 5 inch ruffles. Two colors, white and beige. A remarkable curtain special at only $1.79 pair.
