THE SPEED DEMON DEFENDS HIMSELF

A week ago last the Record carried a little story on the ver-ious road records which had been shattered by a local young business man who enjoys pressing a little heavier than the average

And about two days after the paper was out an anonymous correspondent proceeded to burn us up. When other papers were campaigning for speed control we were acting as publicity agent for a speed demon—and then some more which we will not re-produce here.

Well, we just took the communication over to the alleged "speed demon" to get his reaction. He admitted that maybe he liked to drive a little too fast, but in his own defense he added:

"I've driven all over the country, in every state in the United States, and I've never had but one accident and that was when off the road, hitting me out in a field. Where there are speed and other traffic regulations I try to obey them and I've never been other trainic regulations 1 my to only include the picked up by a cop. "What's more, I keep my eyes right on the road and on the other cars. I don't amuse myself by reading the signs or seeing the sights along the road. I never see anything but the road and what is on it. When other cars are approaching I've got my eyes right on them until I pass them." There is something to his argument, Speed is probably one of the principal causes of accidents, but not the chief cause. The indictment against speed is that it multiplies the results of the disaster if and when it occurs. But the greatest menace to the mead worse even then the speeder is the man who is comthe road, worse even than the speeder, is the man who is con-sciously and flagrantly breaking such elemental roles of safety as passing on curves, on approaches to hills and in the third lane. And a close second is the driver who loiters and meanders along, depending on his slowness for safety, but taking advantage of it also to watch everything but the road and the traffic.

If the young man referred too really does keep his mind in-tently on the road and observes the rules and regulations of the road with special regards to passing he must be at least two-thirds of a good driver anyway.

INDUSTRY AND EDUCATION

Recent trends in student enrollment indicate that a new type of school which approaches in its method and curriculum the acutal world, which it prepares for, is coming increasingly into favor.

Outstanding among such schools which draw on local young people is the University of Cincinnati, which alternates study periods with periods of factory apprenticeship. Another which has local representation is the General Motors Tech, an institution which has been set up by the General Motors Corporation to educate young men as it wants them educated.

The old style colleges, which still lead in enrollment, have been indicted as unworldly institutions where young men and women live sheltered from the storm and stress of existence in little backwaters of life. Increasingly in these schools the social and the athletic eclipse the interests of education. It has been an open question whether they were fitted or unfitted for the struggle for existence which most of them inevitably faced when they left the cloisters of the campus.

It's different in these new schools. They are geared to the tempo of a rapid world, and a young man will step from them into the employment for which he is very definitely fitted without a hitch. There may be a little athletics and social life, but it is not allowed to interfere with the serious business of the institu-tions, which is fitting the student specifically to do something specific. The old fashioned college and universities had better watch sharp, lest they degenerate into social clubs, while the serious mined youth go to the schools that are about something and that know what they are about.

There is evidence that this tendency to link up the world of industry with the schools will work on down to the high school, through the apprentice system.

The Ancient Craft of Arrow Maker Practised By W. Becker As Hobby

Machine Made Arrows More Accurate Than Product of Mediaeval Craftsmen

This opening note is a little of: the record, but in the event that your last name happens to be Eletcher or anything corresponding it doubtless means that back in the Dark Ages some progenitor of yours belonged to the ancient and honorable profession of arrow maker, since that was the name of the trade. Then the maker of arrows, like the makers of other materials of combat, was a man of leading consequence in the community, since on the accuracy of his handiwork depended success in the hunt, or life and death in conflict. Yet his product was probably not nearly as accurate as that turned out in the shop of Buchanan's one and

"fletcher," Walton Becker. Becker has developed this novel and interesting craft as his hobby during the past two years, mainly because of his association with a growing number of local people interested in the fascinating sport of archery. In a little shop in the rear of his nome he has installed some clever equipment of his own manufacture and there turns out in his spare moments machinemade arrows which are far more accurate than the most skillful handiwork of the mediaeval craftsman, embodying modern developments in accuracy tests. It is known that the archers of Buchanan, the pre-game favortoday who shoot for sport can outite, used a powerful running atclass in marksmanship the Robin tack against the Rangers throughout the tilt. The Bucks rolled up Hoods and Wilhelm Tells of the 17 first downs by rushing to Cass' days when shooting with the bow 2, Cass got four first downs on was serious business. The best material for a bow is the osage orange native to Michigan, Other woods used are lemon wood from Cuba and yew from Oregon. The oldtime archers used yew bows. The osage bow is preferred because it is more dependable under all conditions, and is not so "temperamental" as other woods in various weather conditions. Cassopolis ____ 0 Lack Interest Main Obstacle Three Proposals Faced By Strong Opposition; Must Get Majority Vote

It has been history in Michigan elections that more amendments to the state constitution fail on account of lack of the required majority of the total vote for Secretary of State than on account of the opposition.

It is not enough that an amendment receive more "yes" than "no" votes. It must receive a majority of the total votes because of That are, delicious, and lack of information, great numbers of voters abstain from registsatisfying. ering any vote on part or all of, the amendments submitted. In this case abstention from voting has the same force as a vote against. Four amendments will be submitted at the general polls in November. They are listed as proposals

Proposal 1 This is an amendment to Article II, Section 10, of the state constitution protecting citizens against unreasonable search and then tested for perfect straight ness before further work is done. The standard equipment of af archer is two "pairs" of arrows, a pair in archery consisting of three shafts. In the phraseology of archery there are three arrows to a pair and two pairs to a set. Each arrow in a set must weigh the same and have the same center of gravity. Goldsmiths scales are used to test. The minimum equipment of the archer is considered two sets or twelve arrows, from which he will select six for six shots comprising a round. Each of the arrows used by one archer must have the same "spine" or stiffness. The arrow is finished by hand rubbing with shellae and linseed oil, followed by two coats of lacquer. Each arrow is "crested" by painting three or more rings of different colors just below the feathers, these rings identifying the arrows of the contestants. They are tipped with special points, similar to the points on high-powered rifle bullets. Much pains are taken with all details of feathering, notching and the like, which affect accuracy. The length of the arrow must conform to the length of the bow. a 512 foot bow taking a 26 inch airow and other lengths varying to correspond. If the arrow is too short it detracts from accuracy; if it is too long it may result in breaking the bow.

"A "self" arrow is a cheaper arrow which has no footing of beefwood or other hardwood, the cost varying according to the degrees of perfection. The final test of the arrow is on the target range. Becker glues the feathers on with waterproof glue and the excess foother is burned off with a burnthe machine employing a resistance coll of nichrome wire. In painting the crest, he uses a vice which is spun by a tiny motor.
