Buchanan Man Invents Leaf "Picker Upper"

BUCHANAN, Mich., Sept. 13.—A leaf rake has been invented by William Nelson, 65, of Buchanan for which he has the patent pending.

Invents Novel Lawn Leaf Rake

W. D. Nelson Starts Production in Home Shop on Labor Saving Device

That immemorial fall chore, raking up and carrying off the leaves, is soon due to be transferred from hand labor to the mechanized class if a new device designed by William D. Nelson, 215 Cayuga street, catches on as it should.

Mr. Nelson completed his first model of his wheeled leaf rake and dump cart on Aug. 20, and has applied for patent, meanwhile completing two more in his garage workshop. The rake resembles somewhat in principle the farm hay "sweep," but operates by hand. It is a light, sheet iron box, 3x3 feet in dimension, enclosed on the sides and back with sheet iron 12 inches high and open in front. Projecting in front of the box are the teeth which gather up the leaves. This box is mounted on two small wheels, and has a push handle in the rear. While it is reinforced with light steel straps, rendering it quite durable, it is light and has a pliancy that adjusts the teeth to uneven ground.

The box will hold conveniently about 8 cubic feet or about ten times as much as the ordinary bushel basket. Gathering the leaves with Nelson's device moreover obviates the labor of gathering up the leaves, and makes it easy to transport them anywhere desired. It is of course most suitable for larger private lawns, for public parks or grounds, and for street work. Nelson stated that he wished to locate one immediately in Buchanan, Niles, South Bend and other neighboring towns to acquaint the district with the idea. He has christened his device "The Lady K."

Dr. Strayer Loses Watermelon Title

Dr. J. C. Strayer was deposed from his two-year supremacy as the watermelonstealingest member of the Buchanan Lions club in the annual contest held Wednesday evening, when Elmer Keyes, a new member, reached new heights in consumption ability.

Another newcomer, C. O. Clark, proved a good competitor, emerging from a liberal portion or Georgia Rattlesnake only a seed row behind the doctor. It is reported that during the progress of meeting an officer of the law arrived at door with a warrant charging that R. G. VanDeusen had stolen the watermelons. However members of the club dissuaded the officer from service at that time in deference to the feelings of Mr. VanDeusen.

Around About Buchanan

Find Old Bridge

It's not new but its still news. Not long ago Bob and Jack Banke were digging up a water pipe in front of the home of Mrs. Boyle on Portage street a few rods north of the Redbud Inn, when they encountered old wooden bridge planking at a depth of seven feet. It is said that the original course of McCoy's creek crossed Portage street at that point, and the plankings represented the old bridge.

Vacant Lot Petunias

Traveling out North Main street past the town limits you can hardly fail to notice the lot planted to petunias immediately south of the William Ednie home. The Record has told the story of these petunias before, but it's worth telling over. Six years ago Mrs. Ednie planted a dime package of petunias on this lot. In the fall they seeded themselves and the following spring there were many plants. Mrs. Ednie transplanted them in rows. She has been doing this annually since. This year the flowers are more beautiful than they have ever been before. And it is a lot better than a lot with a lot of weeds.

15-Foot Hollyhock

Another floral wonder on North Main street is the 15 foot hollyhock stock which towers higher than the barn roof at the home of Mrs. M. L. Mills and Miss Mae Mills. A short time back it bore several feet of pink blossoms but now it has gone to seed.

The School World

The scholarships, one of which is awarded a freshman student from each senatorial district each year, were renewed because of high scholarship maintained by the recipients. The scholarships are equivalent to $90 in college fees.

Townsend Club to Convene Tonight

The local Townsend club will hold a meeting at D's Cafe at 7:30 p. m. this (Thursday) evening.

Rev. Rice Moved To Grand Rapids

Transfer Not Finally Official, But Is Very Probable

Rev. Thomas Rice, pastor of the Buchanan Methodist church for several years, received notice the first of the week that he had been transferred to the Epworth Church of Grand Rapids, the change coming as the result of a number of shifts following the death of a minister in the district.

The change was not finally official as the Record went to print late yesterday afternoon, from the fact that one minister involved in the change had not yet received his notification and giving final assent. It is more than likely however that the change will take place, inasmuch as the transfers are promotions for the most part. Rev. Rice had been previously invited to a Grand Rapids church and while the Buchanan community will deeply miss him, it is pleased with the advancement the change means for him.

Other shifts in the general transfer are: Rev. Harry Henry, a former college president in Iowa, goes to Lowell; Rev. Stanley Niles, district superintendent of the Big Rapids district, assumes the college presidency; Rev. Maylin Jones, a former Buchanan pastor, becomes superintendent of the Big Rapids district, being supplanted at Hastings by Rev. Babbitt; Rev. M. D. McKean of Epworth church, Grand Rapids, goes to Muskegon Heights to replace Rev. Babbitt; Rev. Rice takes over at Epworth church.

2 Unknown Men Attack Blaney

No Explanation for Surprise Night Attack on Local Man at His Home

The town was aroused Tuesday evening by news of the mysterious attack perpetrated on William Blaney, foreman in the maintenance department of the Indiana & Michigan, at his home at 205 Lake street late Tuesday night.

Two men came to the door of the Blaney home shortly after 10 p. m. and Elaine Blaney went to the door. The men stated that they wanted employment and would like to talk to Mr. Blaney. Miss Blaney called her father. As he stepped out of the door, one of the unknown visitors snapped "Get him!" and both attacked him. Catching him off guard they knocked him down. His daughter heard the commotion and ran out and then shrieked and fainted on the porch. Apparently frightened by this the two men ran without inflicting any serious injury on Mr. Blaney. He sprang up and tried to get their license number but they kept their lights off until they reached Front street. However as the car went under the Third and Lake street light it was apparent that it carried an Indiana license plate. In addition to the two who attacked Blaney, a third had remained at the wheel in the car. No explanation for the surprise attack has been advanced.

Scouts to Dine at Camp Madron

200 to Attend Complimentary Dinner for Area Leaders

The Boy Scout Council of Berrien and Cass Counties will start its fall program with a complimentary dinner given by the Council to its troop leaders and executive members. It is expected that more than two hundred will participate at this dinner at Camp Madron next Thursday, September 15th.

The program will be charge of Arthur Knoblauch, Area Scout Commissioner, assisted by the different District Commissioners. In appreciation for the services which the Scout leaders give during the season the Council stages this annual affair at camp so that ideas may be exchanged, supplies given out, and the responsibilities of the organization to the youth of the Area be impressed upon the leadership by an outstanding speaker, this year the speaker is to be Frank Davis. An outstanding speaker from Minnesota, and who has long been connected with the organization of youth.

The first major event of the season will be a Sea Scout regatta at Camp Madron September 18th. The races are to be held under the direction of Ship 99, with Albert Webb, Skipper, in charge. The races are for the Plym Trophy Cup which is awarded each year to the best sailing crew. The public is invited to this event. The second major event will be the Cub rally which is to be held at Camp Madron on September 24th. It is expected that over three hundred Cubs will participate in this event, which will be made up of many Cubbing activities. The public is also invited to this affair.

The third major event will be held on October 29th and 30th. This will be the fall camporee for all troops. This will be an overnight affair and will take in many Scouting activities. Motion pictures of the summer activities, and plenty of inter-troop competition. This affair is also open to the public. The fourth major event will be the birthday party of the Council on October 30th then the birthday cake with 3,000 candles is to be cut. This affair will also be held at the camp and will be open to all persons interested in Scouting.

The details of the birthday party will be given out later. The fifth major event will be the attendance of the entire Council at the Notre Dame football game on October 1st. Each year about fourteen hundred Scouts and their leaders journey to Notre Dame as guests of the university for that particular day. Plans have been completed for this event this year also. The sixth major event will be the Sea Scout Annual Ball which will be held November 25th. This event is rapidly becoming an outstanding affair in the two counties and is looked upon as one of the big social events of the year. Many prominent people sponsor this particular dance and this year will far surpass anything as yet attempted. The seventh major event will be the five Courts of Honor which will be held during the month of October. The first Court of Honor is for District 1 and 2 at St. Joseph, October 10th. On October 11th District 3 will have its Court at Niles. On October 13th District 4 will hold its Court at Three Oaks. On October 24th District 5 will hold a Court of Honor in Cassopolis, and on October 25th District 7 will hold its Court at Dowagiac. The eighth major event is the opening of the Council's training course. The training course will open on October 20th in the Junior high school in Benton Harbor. The final banquet for the school will be held on December 15th. The training school will be held twice this year instead of once. The second school will be held in another part of the Area in the spring. With all those major events listed for the next two months, together with the many troop activities normally scheduled by the different troops and institutions, Scouting will have a most outstanding program underway.

Street Department Paints Town Clock

The city street department had a force at work yesterday applying a coat of aluminum paint to the old town clock, indicating that the idea of retiring that time-honored institution had been dropped. Street Commissioner Mitchell has also painted the containers of the traffic lights with aluminum paint and has installed new red and green bulbs in the signals.

THE SPLIT SECOND

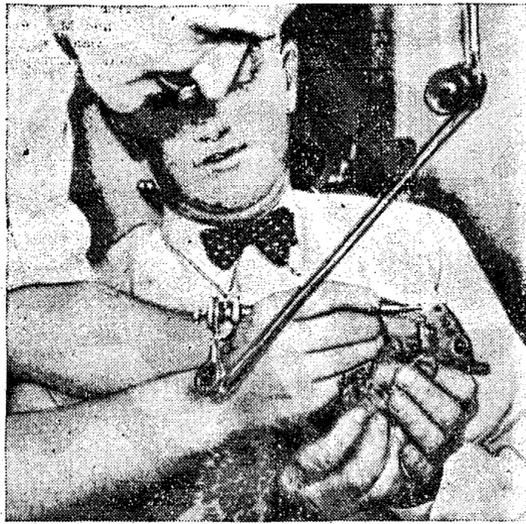

Two researchers from Yale University reported last week their discovery, based on exhaustive road tests made with a motion picture camera, that one out of every five American drivers allows less than a second's leeway when he passes a car on a two-lane road in the face of oncoming traffic. About one out of ten places himself, and of course the opposing driver, in definite danger. The danger would be greater if many careful drivers had not learned to step on their brakes and so make space for fools to whom the saving of a minute or two is worth the risk of one or more lives.

The incident illustrates the increasingly important role which increasingly small fractions of time play in our civilization. The traditional farmer who wanted to know what's time to a hawk represented an obsolescent situation. Consider the motorist traveling at fifty miles an hour, or about seventy-three feet a second, who is passing a fellow-traveler making forty miles an hour, or about fifty-eight feet a second. In a second he can obviously get fifteen feet of clearance. If he needs twenty feet it will take him a third of a second longer. That third of a second may make the difference between life and death for several persons.

The maniacs who miscalculate, or who take blind chances, exact their daily toll. The amazing and reassuring fact is that most of us do judge these subdivisions of time and space with sufficient accuracy to escape harm. Habit and necessity have made our time sense far more acute than it could ever have been with our ancestors. The critical second has replaced in significance the lingering hour. Mainly, we use the seconds well. What we do with the hours is another question. There is no conclusive evidence that we dispose of them more wisely than our forefathers did.

West Buchanan

History Broceus School
 Mrs. Alva Best recounted a few of the incidents and conditions surrounding the early days of the Broceus school at the meeting of the Parent-Teacher Association of that school Tuesday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Vetterle of Wagner Road and Mr. and Mrs.

Henry Hartman of Baroda arrived home Sunday from a motor trip of a week to Jonesville, Va., and return.

The school was named after Abram Broceus, who nevertheless moved into its vicinity about 1863, some time after the building of the first frame school. The brick building now standing was erected about 1870 about 7 years after Broceus purchased the farm in the district from Hezekiah Howe. The bricks were made by the Eisele's who made brick at their old farm homestead in the district.

Among the well known pioneer teachers who taught at the Broceus school in earlier years were B. F. Fisk and California Johnson. Johnson taught there several terms, Arthur Wray being his student for two years. Wray remembers his two famous rawhide whips, Tom Trusty and Susan Trusty. Tom Trusty hung over the hall door by which the boys entered the school room and Susan Trusty over the door by which the girls entered. The one was used for the boys, the other for the girls, with strict impartiality.

The school was then the center of neighborhood entertainment. In the fall the young people gathered at the homes for apple paring bees or corn husking bees and in the winter at the schoolhouse for spelling bees or for singing or writing school. The Broceus school and the Wagner school were friendly rivals for years in spelling bees, clashing first at one school and then at the other.

The present brick school is the fourth school building which has stood in the district. The first was a log structure which was built in the deep woods somewhere on the rear of the present George Huff farm. The next was another log structure which stood across the road from the present Broceus school to the south. The next is still remembered by older people as the "old red school" and stood on the site of the present. A part of the logs of the first school are contained in the present barn at the George Huff farm.

LIBERTY'S CONTRACT
—THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES—
American liberty is not a free gift of Nature to a favored people; it was won by struggle and sacrifice.
The Constitution of the United States is the signed contract which guarantees to each one of us certain rights, liberties, and immunities. Should that contract be destroyed our liberties would be destroyed. Important changes in its terms would bring changes in our lives. Instead of free citizens we might find ourselves the slaves of new masters. The Constitution is the foundation upon which rests our system of popular government. If this system is to be preserved we must preserve it. Let us be fully alive to the importance of our responsibility as we observe this 151st Anniversary of the signing of the Constitution, September 17, 1787.

Folklore of many peoples tells that when a child dies God makes a new star in the sky. German peasants in ancient days believed stars are angels' eyes, and in old England it was thought wicked to point at stars.

The Oliver Hotel—South Bend's Finest

The people from all over this section of Northern Indiana, the tourists and visitors, too, have pronounced the Oliver Hotel in South Bend, the finest in this section of the country. All the rooms are elaborately furnished with modern ventilation and hot and cold running water at all times. Mr. Devaney, the genial manager, takes special pains to see that the service is as near perfection as is possible to make it. Recently much remodeling has been going on and now that it is completed, the Oliver Hotel can truly boast of being the most up to date to be found anywhere. Traveling men and our own people are extended a warm welcome to make this hotel their headquarters when in town. Tourists will find a haven of rest and are made to feel at home. This can truly be called a "home away from home." The rates of the Oliver operating on the European Plan are in line with the times and the service compares with the most luxurious hotels of the country. It is indeed in every respect a thoroughly modern high grade hotel and we refer it to all our readers without hesitation. We congratulate Mr. Devaney who manages this fine hotel, up to the splendid service he is rendering to the public.

Tight-Wadding It Through Europe

CHAPTER 52
By HAWES

It was during my last day in Paris that a thing happened tending to confirm my impression that there is at times a guardian deity watching over home town boys in strange places, turning their blunders into good fortune.

I had really intended that day, July 31, 1937, to be my first in England. But I had rather casually taken the advice of another traveler who had assured me that I did not need a passport visa to enter England. That had really been the case in Norway, Denmark and in Belgium, so it did not seem preposterous. But about an hour before I should leave for my train I checked and found that the advice was wrong. I made a dash for the English legation, abandoning my ordinary practice of going by bus, and calling a taxi. I had heard that French taxi drivers were bandits and more and this was a chance to learn about that.

I caught a taxi at the Place de la Opera and we wheeled down the great Boulevard Houssman, the chief shopping street of Paris, to the Avenue Hoche, only two blocks from the Arch du Triomphe on the Champs de Elysees. The legation was closed. There was nothing to it but stay over. Disconsolate I paid the driver his fee, 7 1/2 francs or about 29 cents, for considerably over a mile. I decided to check on this business of taxi fares and I called another taxi to ride back. He drove ahead to the Champs de Elysees, taking another route to the Opera, but the charges were identical.

So I had another day to spend in Paris. I decided to go to Fontainebleau, not so much for the palace, as for the famous forest and artists colony, once the home of Millet. The polite head porter mapped my route, telling me what busses to take. From the Place de la Opera, I was taken down the Boulevard Housman in the opposite direction from my morning taxi drive, along the Rue St. Martin through the heart of old Paris. We passed through the two old arches, celebrating the triumphs of the Louises in the Middle Ages through the heart of the old city. This was Victor Hugo's town, and almost the heart of modern history. In this network of old streets were fought the battles of the French Revolution of 1789, of the Commune of 1870, behind barricades of paving stones. The bus swung into the Boulevard Voltaire, the Boulevard Richard Lenoir, toward the Place de la Bastille. I did not get any further.

As the bus swung toward the great column that marks the site of the Bastille, most famous prison of history, and scene of many struggles, suddenly my eyes were struck by a sight that seemed like history all over again. Eight streets converge at the Bastille column and down every street were pouring marching columns carrying red banners mingled with French tricolors and the insignia of the Paris labor unions.

It seemed as though the great events told in the pages of "Les Miserables," of "The Tale of Two Cities," might be happening all over again. Suddenly I did not want to go to Fontainebleau. I charged for the rear of the bus at the first stop. But French bus conductors are solicitous about greenhorn passengers and try to take care of them whether they wish it or not. This conductor knew that I had paid to go to Fontainebleau and seemed to think it was his business to see that I went. He grabbed my arm with a torrent of French. I had succumbed in similar struggles previously but this time I was going on even if I left my shirt with him.

Yanking loose I dived down the steps, turning at the foot to look back at the conductor who was waving his arms and shouting in frenzied concern. But I pointed toward the marching columns and started in that direction. A light of understanding broke over his mobile, mustachioed face. So I would join the parade? That was fine. Doubtless the bus motormen's union was marching some where and he would like to be marching himself. He was still bowing and smiling approvingly as the bus whirled from my sight.

On the summit of the great column marking the site of the Bastille I saw a railing and a few tiny figures. It seemed like a good place to watch the parade form. I charged for it. There was no elevator—only a dark spiraling staircase on the interior. I climbed until my breath was gone and my legs were numb; sat down a minute and then climbed on to the top.

There was a great panorama. I stood on the spot which had marked the center of the greatest event of modern times, before the World War at least—the French revolution of 1791. Down one of those avenues the young Napoleon had trained his artillery on the Bastille. And round had battled, time and again, the legions of the people of France. Here again a Socialist and workmen's parade was forming, for what purpose I did not know. But I stood 150 feet above the throng in the brilliant sunshine of a blue summer day and tried to imagine myself decades back.

I know no French but a little Latin and I could translate enough of the banners to learn that this was a grand demonstration in observance of the 23rd anniversary of the assassination of Jean Jaures, noted Socialist leader who was killed while attempting to incite popular revolts in Germany and France, using his influence with the common people of Europe to induce them to rebel against their governments and block the World War. He was shot by some one interested in seeing the war go on, on July 31, 1914, a few days before the great conflict started.

But he remains a patron saint of the lower orders of the people of France. He founded the Socialist paper "L'Humanite." The working men of Paris were combining with this observance of his memory a gigantic demonstration against war and fascism.

Mingled with their banners were others bearing great pictures of Jean Jaures, who, as the banners read, "died for the people and the peace." The advancing phalanxes swung down the streets to the converging center, mingled with bands, and formed in columns headed up the Rue Antoine, historic old street along the left side of the Seine. As they came to a stand they started singing; column after column took up their patriotic and revolutionary songs and the gathering thousands who watched them joined until the volume gathered and swelled into a vast chorus.

The front of the column started up the Rue Antoine, and it seemed time to join the parade. I galloped down the dark stairs with small regard for my rusty joints and out on the street. Girls in bonnets looking not unlike Salvation lassies were selling small pictures of Jaures as badges. It seemed like a good idea. I gave a girl a franc and she gave me eight badges. I had expected some change. The girl wanted to pin them all on me.

Duly labeled I became as nearly as I could, one of the parade. I didn't exactly join one of the unions but I marched at the side without let or hindrance from anyone, and when the converging crowds at the side impinged, I slipped behind them and wormed through the crowd. Every block or two column would stop and wait a few minutes, the marchers singing. From time to time I would single out one of these ascetic, intellectual faces common among the paraders on the chance that they might be able to speak English and tell me more of what it was about. I asked dozens in the course of the parade, but many a "parley vous Anglais."

The make-up of the parade was interesting. There was a platoon of doctors, another of nurses, and many of boys in uniform. There was a section of women carrying banners labeling them as representatives of the French Women's Association for the Opposition to Fascism and War. There was a platoon of girls dressed all in white carrying banners denouncing fascism and war, surmounted by a larger one with the legend, "La Vie est Da Nous" (Life is from us).

They all sang with a volume and vigor that I had never seen equalled before. I stood by the side and watched a section of young men singing, singing with their whole bodies, their shoulders and heads back and the veins standing out on their foreheads like whipcords with the lusty vigor of their song. There was the fervor of three old-time Methodist camp meetings and a dozen American political rallies rolled into one.

From the Bastille we marched up the famous old street which merged into the Rue d' Rivoli and passed through the heart of the oldest part of Paris. Along d' Rue Rivoli we marched, headed toward the old cathedral of Notre Dame. I noticed halted sections demonstrating with unusual vigor under a projecting balcony three stories up, whereon there stood a proud, disdainful looking dame. Whether she was connected in some way with the Fascists or whether she had offended the marchers by some counter demonstration I do not know, but the shouting was any thing but complimentary in tone. They shouted "A bas Fascistes! A bas Fascistes" (down with the Fascists); they shook their clenched hands at her with Latin vigor; they sang with a fiercer gusto.

But the dame stood on her balcony and watched them with a stony, contemptuous face.

"She's got her nerve," I thought, but later I noticed that she was not unprotected. The building was near an intersection and a few rods down the side street I saw two trucks loaded with heavily-armed soldiers, waiting grimly for anything in the nature of a riot to break out.

I wanted to find out why the crowd had it in for the dame on the balcony. I dodged into a little coffee bar immediately below and inquired of the girl in charge, "Do you speak English?" For a wonder I had found somebody that could for she answered, "Yes, a little." "What has that woman done?" I inquired, pointing up in the general direction of the balcony. The girl gave a quick look about her and then abruptly went to the back of the cafe. I then noticed it was full of young men who had no Jean Jaures badges.

A tall, blond young Frenchman stepped between me and the exit. I was cornered in a recess between the wall and the bar, and he stood with hands on his hips and one foot on a chair, barring my way. There was a frosty look in his eyes, and he jabbered in French, nodding upward at the dame on the balcony. I knew then why the soldiers were drawn up along the neighboring streets, and why the woman could afford to look unconcerned. These coffee bars and shops all along the street were full of young Fascists itching for trouble. The young Frenchman apparently wanted to know if I would like to make something out of the street incident. But I repeated over and over my only French, "Parlez vous Anglais?"

Finally with a look of disgust he turned and walked off. If I had been French I would probably have rated a punch in the nose. I dodged into the open and decided to stay there. But I made one more attempt to find out what it was about. There was not a soul in the side street but the soldiers watching soberly and a grim officer in front. Following the good old newspaper rule that they never do more than throw you out, I walked up to the officer and asked him if he could speak English. He had been watching me with gimlet eyes as I advanced and when I spoke he snapped something incomprehensible but very authoritative. I asked another question in English and nodded back at the noisy demonstration in progress. He snapped at me again with a show of impatience and I decided that I was being told to get the devil out of there. Which was what I did.

The Battle is On

This paid political ad, written September 10, my sixty-third birthday, to be published after the Primary, is to thank you for your votes given me on Primary Day and to put in writing my promise that, win or lose, Wednesday, September 14, will find me continuing, by a speech at Union Grange Hall, Porter township, Cass county, the battle to defeat the New Deal wreckers.

Then, Thursday, the 15th, will be at Avalon Pavilion, Barron Lake, east of Niles; Friday, the 16th, at Marcellus; and Saturday, the 17th at Dowagiac.

The Battle Lines Have Been Drawn

It is now conceded that the coming battle of the ballots is between Democrats and Republicans lined up on one side; New Dealers and their communistic allies on the other.

The issue is whether we shall have a sound, safe, conservative program, living within our means as a Nation, continuing on our course which has ever been upward and upward under a constitutional form of government—a government by and for the people, or whether we shall continue the wild, wasteful experiments inaugurated and carried on by the New Dealers, continue to a dictatorship where a Roosevelt will rule or ruin.

After more than five years of Roosevelt, his promises and his abuses of the men who create and give jobs and meet payrolls, we have more want, more people on relief, more men on public payroll

Historic Fort

Fort Donelson, 32 miles west of Clarksville, Tenn., is of interest because of the part it played in a naval engagement as well as in a land battle. It was here that General Grant defeated the Confederate defenders of the fort and earned for himself the nickname, "Unconditional Surrender Grant" in one of the early engagements of the Civil war.

Seabrook, N. H.—This town is winning recognition as New England's Greta Green, according to marriage license statistics recently announced here.

Last year 658 licenses were issued to couples from all the New England states, with the largest number from Massachusetts. All but 13 of the couples were married here. August led with 90 marriages, while February with 14 saw the fewest nuptials.

New Hampshire's new blood-test law, which becomes effective October 1, is expected to reduce the number.

How Sharks Are Trapped
In Torres sound, south of Papua, the natives trap sharks. The trap consists of a pile of empty, air-tight coconut shells joined together with a rope and attached to a canoe by a lengthy line. The native takes the shells in his canoe to the fishing ground and places them in the water after baiting them with a dead fish on a fire-hardened wooden hook. When the shark grabs the bait it attempts to dive, but the buoy-like action of the empty shells prevents it from doing so. The fish then dashes madly about, dragging trap and canoe along until it becomes exhausted. Then, if the line is still holding, it is hauled in, speared and taken ashore.

Between now and December 15th the following objectives are to be reached. First, the adding of 483 new members of the organization as Boy Scouts. Second, a goal of 1684 as the Scout goal. Third, the addition of 133 new Cubs. Fourth, the total registered Cub membership to be 618. Fifth, an increase in Sea Scout membership of 25. Sixth the total registered Sea Scout membership to be 150. Advancement objectives are to be: Tenderfoot Scouts becoming second class, 40. Second, second class Scouts to become first class, 528. Third, the total of merit badges to be passed, 1800.

A quota sheet has been compiled, pledge cards made, and attractive posters for troop rooms have been prepared, and general instructions for the plan issued to all troops. The awards in the contest are as follows: Every troop, ship, or pack, which reaches its objective by October 30th, the day of the birthday celebration, will receive a beautifully engraved candle for its troop trophy case. Second, all troops making their goals by December 15th will be given a large birthday cake. These cakes to be delivered so that they can have them for their Christmas parties. Third, every Scout who recruits a new member during the celebration an individual award will be made. These particular awards, and the one of the troop, will be made at the Court of High Awards. Scouts, Cubs, and Sea Scouts, as well as their leaders, are very enthusiastic over the contest and many already are preparing the pledges for the trip so that they can be turned in on next Thursday night. Even though this particular Area rates among the first in troops and membership density, nevertheless, the Council wishes to expand so as to give every boy in the Area an opportunity to belong to Scouting. Officials of the Council feel that this particular celebration and contest will go far toward realizing this objective.
