To the inexperienced, water color may seem to be easy to use. However, there appears to be a grave error concerning this commonly used decorative material for several moving pictures have been produced to show more definitely the pitfalls of water color. Since water color is a treacherous medium, and also a very useful one, the high school students have been spending some time on manipulation. They are learning to take the water out of the water color and to put in a graded background for their subjects which are free from blemishes.

The bulletin board is attractive with its creative expressions completed in this color medium. A few subjects approach professional grade.

The junior high is making individual "Hobby Booklet Covers." The subjects are unlike, and the contents will serve not only to enrich the knowledge of the growing artist, but will serve nicely for the "Art Morgue." At least one craft project will be assigned. Several are underway.
